REBELS CLAIM TO HOLD TERRITORY

SAUDI ARABIA imposes naval blockade

Cairo, Nov 10 (Agencies) — Saudi Arabia imposed a naval blockade on the Red Sea coast of northern Yemen to stem the flow of weapons and fighters to Shiite rebels along its border. The move came as Saudi Arabia and its Gulf neighbors continued their efforts to isolate Iran, which they accuse of supporting the Shiite Houthi rebels.

The move comes amid increasing tensions between Iran and Saudi Arabia over the Houthis’ control of parts of Yemen. The Houthis have long been supported by Iran, and Riyadh fears that their advances could undermine its regional influence. The Houthis took control of the capital, Sanaa, in September 2014, sparking international concern and prompting Saudi Arabia to lead a military intervention against the rebels.

The Houthis have been fighting a war against the Saudi-backed government in Yemen since 2014, and the conflict has become one of the most destructive and protracted in the region. The Houthis have seized control of many key cities and are said to be backed by Iran, which Riyadh accuses of providing financial and military support.

Saudi Arabia said in a statement that the move was taken “in the interest of the security and stability of the region.” The Houthis have been described as a “terrorist group” by Riyadh, and the Saudi-led coalition has launched a series of military operations against the rebels in recent years.

The Houthis’ control of Yemen’s northwestern border with Saudi Arabia has allowed them to smuggle weapons and fighters into the country, and Riyadh fears that this could undermine its efforts to restore order and stability.

The Houthis are also supported by Iran, which Riyadh accuses of providing financial and military support. Saudi Arabia has said that the Houthis’ control of Yemen’s northwestern border with Saudi Arabia has allowed them to smuggle weapons and fighters into the country, and Riyadh fears that this could undermine its efforts to restore order and stability.

"A hardline Kuwaiti Islamist MP on Sunday called for the inclusion of music classes into a compulsory subject in our national curriculum.

"Mr Mohammad Hayef, MP, has issued the statement during the National Assembly's regular meeting on Tuesday under the chairmanship of National Assembly Affairs Dr Mohamed Al-Barrak who also warned that individual's actions are phenomenal!

"Finally, Mr. Mohammad Hayef's call for the inclusion of the prime minister's power over the state banks in the law will certainly cause unwanted overlapping of the articles of our Constitution. Therefore, this call for the inclusion of music classes will certainly worsen the relatively positive atmosphere within our political environment: its negative consequences will certainly make our political environment less attractive, changing or reorganizing school curriculums according to recent discoveries or new discoveries in the relationship between culture and music while suggesting the appointment of a sign language expert to translate the contents of this bill, which she described as "a result of long year's hard work.""

Western teachers spotlight challenges in Kuwaiti schools

Michelle shares interesting experience of teaching

By Valiya S. Sajjad
Arab Times Staff

KUWAIT CITY, Nov 10: As a teacher you need both qualifications and soft skills such as an amiable disposition, good personality and courtesy among others to be successful in your profession, says Michelle Nathoo, art teacher at Fahaheel English School.

She was speaking during an event, “Challenges faced by western teachers working in Kuwait”, at Advocates for Women’s Rights Exchange (AWARE) Center Tuesday. Michelle said Fahaheel is one of the challenges Western teachers face in class rooms in Kuwait. She said that sometimes children have English as their third language, while some have it as their first language.

“In my school, there is a good mix of students,” Michelle added. She also included some common problems that teachers face by having to play roles of a teacher, mother or a friend of a teacher. “Then what about your words and tones,” she asked.

Teachers will need time to get adjusted to a new environment and be focused on their work, she said. Teachers will need to do their own research on how people react in the same-country, how to “teach teaching in a multi-culture cosmopolitan,” and how to work in the Middle East.

Further she added that when the teachers go to their home country, they find it hard to get back in touch with them. “It takes time. In one school, the teachers moved out of Kuwait to their home country. There is nothing to talk between.”

She underlined the importance of getting in touch with the people and getting bogged down with the problem. “School is the last place you get to have a free conversation. You have to talk with the students.”

“Get to know the people in school, the administrators, the children and so on. She said that associations are important to get your way through as a teacher. ‘Get to school early and you will be safe.’

Michelle also said teachers are to answer questions and questions. Michelle agreed with a quote that is “love from students must have something that is irrespective of the fact whether the children deserve it or not.”

The atmosphere, a teacher expressed, noted that he was checked to find much training to overcome poor-teacher training and making up good guides of children. He said that this was a big advantage to him that these guides are not neglected knowing about their children’s progress.

Michelle also highlighted that there are schools in Kuwait, where free lunches are given to students. Michelle shared her experience in Japan, where she was met by the headmaster at the airport and dropped the school uniform, which was pressed and folded and stocked with food. “They gave me money to use on the two couple of weeks. The apartment also had a telephone with which I could call my parents.”

Booster

She was stressing on the importance of making teachers feel at home in a multicultural context. A teacher, who was part of the discussion, observed that it is necessary that teachers move from one school to another not just on account of pay. “There are psychological needs such as freedom, attitude and so on that are important to people in the management.”

“Hailing to the point, Michelle said that there is a lot of frustration that can accumulate in Kuwait. She even named factors such as the lack of grammar in comparison to countries, the originality of the students and so on is something that can drag your standards and pace.”

One of the participants in the discussion said that one way to get around frustration is by focusing on what you have come for. In some cases it is making money, for some it is to make a change. He observed that students often ignore.Multi-lingual issues turned out to be a very touchy subject. “There is a lot of Turkish language in Kuwait. We have students who have difficulty in identifying students because of similar names and other issues.”

Michelle added: “One parent once came to me and said that he could not remember his son’s name. They had two separate names, and the teacher still knew them both. ‘It makes me very happy. You can make him cooperate for an interview. It makes him feel known.’

Another lady, who handles children aged three to eight, said that teachers are graduates of special education. “They come with the parents’ permission and expect results in four weeks. The parents are not happy if they do not make progress.”

“A teacher from Uganda with long years of teaching experience in Kuwait and teaching his Arabic in a public school, a group of parents took the first step, and told him that their son had been talking to them about his teacher.”

Michelle said students were engaged in reading stories about their children’s progress. She said that teachers can talk to each other about their children’s eyes checked and so on, to their children. “I could tell them to get their cigarettes and so on.”

The teachers then shared their experience of teaching their children Arabic. “This they did not do anything with the parents or the teachers, and without any communication.”

KUWAIT CITY, Nov 2: The Court of Appeals allowed the appeal of a man who was sentenced to death for the murder of a Kuwaiti woman.

The court, which was presided over by Judge Adhnan Al-Arabi, ordered the man to be transferred to the Deportation Center.

The man was arrested in April after he confessed to killing the woman. He was referred to Farwaniya Hospital by paramedics and a case was registered.

During interrogation Naif denied the allegations that he attacked the victim, while the guard investigated the incident. He was later taken to the hospital for treatment and was referred to the psychiatric hospital.

The court, in its decision, ordered the victim to be transferred to the Deportation Center.
Barack Obama and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu held a meeting on Monday that Prime Minister Saad al-Hariri formed a new unity government since Hariri led his coalition, sparking construction as “unprecedented,” sparking tension between major parties and bellies in a country facing sectarian and political tensions, as well as a tragic war.

The two sides are as bitterly divided as they have ever been over the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

“Israel has already rejected that concept, saying it would upend the status quo for the next generation of Palestinians and Jews, who live on either side of the state,” one spokeswoman said.

Palestinian Prime Minister Salam Fayyad has said he will not run in the elections, saying he will stay in his position beyond the parliamentary elections.

Abbas, who had won the election in the West Bank, was one of the few leaders in the region who had not announced his plans to run.

The new Prime Minister is a 60-year-old career diplomat, who had spent four years as UAE’s ambassador to the United Nations before returning to his country. He has been described as a highly respected and experienced figure, with a reputation for integrity and professionalism.

The new government, which includes members from the Fatah, Hamas, and the Palestinian Islamic Movement, will be led by Prime Minister Fayyad.

The move comes as the Israeli-Palestinian conflict remains unresolved, with both sides continuing to make concessions and resist proposals for a peace agreement.

The new government is expected to focus on economic development, security, and regional diplomacy, with a particular emphasis on improving the living conditions of Palestinian citizens.

French make gains in contested valley

COMBAT SUPPORT BAGUETTE, Afghanistan, Nov. 10, (AFP): British forces, working with Afghan soldiers and villagers, have seized their first weapons cache in a month-long operation in north eastern Afghanistan, the British military said Tuesday.

Since the French entered the valley, the Taliban have been using mortar and rocket fire to try to prevent the French from advancing, said Maj. Ken Canizares, a Marine spokesman in the region.

French forces, along with Afghan troops, have been making steady progress in the area, a French military official said.

Success can be fleeting in Afghanistan, however, as the Taliban often regroup and launch new attacks.

Despite the setbacks, the French are determined to continue their push to the north, with the aim of clearing the entire valley.

Future Tory admin will reduce state intervention: Cameron

Big government can’t fight corruption

LONDON, Nov 10, (RTRS): A future Conservative government will reduce the role of the state and give power back to people, party leader David Cameron said Tuesday.

Cameron said he was committed to reducing the role of government, especially in areas such as healthcare, and would mean putting power back into the hands of the people. He said the Tories had worked out it would have taken 150 years to pay off the national debt if they had this approach.

Cameron added that they had also added money to support the US-resident Richard. "We are in a situation where we can't fight corruption in this country," he said. "But we can fight corruption by giving people a say in what happens in their lives."

"We have to trust people," he said. "We have to look at the figures to see that they are doing something wrong."

"Big government can’t fight corruption and it won’t work," he added. "We will have to put power back into the hands of the people."

In December, Obama said, for the US and China to be able to make good decisions about the US government debt.

The key, he said, was for the US and China to maintain a healthy relationship but not to see China as a competitor. He added that the US, as a global power, has interests that China can help fulfill. He said that both countries needed to cooperate in order to achieve their goals.

Obama then went on to say that the US had made significant progress in the last year, but that there was still work to be done. He said that the US needed to continue to work with China to build a stable and prosperous relationship.

In the interview, Obama also spoke about a variety of other issues, including climate change, the economy, and foreign policy. He said that the US needed to work with other countries to address these issues, and that he believed that the US and China could work together to achieve these goals.

Throughout the interview, Obama emphasized the importance of the US-China relationship and the need for both countries to work together to address the challenges that they face. He said that the US needed to continue to work with China to build a strong and productive relationship, and that he believed that this was possible.

In conclusion, Obama said that the US-China relationship was one of the most important relationships in the world, and that the US needed to work with China to build a stable and prosperous future for both countries.
China expresses dissatisfaction

TARANAKI, India, Nov 10, (AP) — The Dalai Lama held a public prayer and lecture in the southern Indian state of Tamil Nadu on Tuesday, two days after China took a fresh step in a week-long row over the disputed Tibetan region.

The exiled Tibetan spiritual leader told tens of thousands of admirers gathered in Tiruchirappalli that Beijing had faced great difficulties but that their “religion and culture would survive the challenges.”

China protested vigorously before the trip, and the religious leader was particularly incensed by the Dalai Lama’s presence in Arunachal state, “illegally occupied” by China for decades — and send them into the folds of the opposition Trinamool Congress.

In this year’s April/May parliamentary polls, the communists won just 24 parliamentary seats, down from 60 earlier.

Pakistan capable of securing nuke arsenal, says Gen Majid

ISLAMABAD, Nov 10, (ITRS) — Pakistan is capable of ensuring the security of its nuclear arsenal and a report is negotiating “understandings” for US assistance to ensure the weapons’ safety was “absurd,” a top Pakistani commander said.

The security of Pakistan’s nuclear weapons and facilites has been brought into question by an increasingly violent Islamist insurgency, though the United States has repeatedly said it has no plans to negotiate an agreement with the Islamic militant groups’ ability to protect them.

The US has, however, suggested an idea that the United States or countries in the region could negotiate a “highly sensitive understanding” that would allow the US to have on-site access to Pakistan’s security for the Pakistani weapons “in case of crisis.”

Pakistan’s military’s joint chiefs of staff Committee chairman General Tariq Majid rejected the report’s “tendency to create a situation where Pakistan cannot use its military might to protect its soil while the US has plans to have its military presence in the state.”

“The Pakistan military is not a party to the discussions on sharing or allowing any foreign individual, entity or a state, security for the Pakistani weapons ‘in case of crisis’,” Majid said in a statement.

Pakistan’s nuclear weapons and facilities have been under international scrutiny due to the growing concern that militants in the region may try to get their hands on the country’s nuclear arsenal.

“If we want make sure that the provi-

Japanese police arrest suspect in British woman's murder

TOKYO, Nov 10 (AP): The deepening clouds 'ties' between the US and Japan have given some hope to a British woman's family in their long search for justice.

The British woman, who was 66 years old and lived in Tokyo, was found dead in her apartment on September 11. The police arrested a 25-year-old man, Ichihashi, on November 6, and said they will seek an indictment against him.

A senior police official said Ichihashi had been arrested on suspicion of murdering the woman.

The woman was found with a single stab wound to the chest and the police said they were investigating the case as a murder.

The official said Ichihashi had been living in the same apartment building as the victim and had been seen entering and leaving the building at around the time the woman was found dead.

The police said they had searched the apartment and found blood stains and other evidence that linked Ichihashi to the crime.

The police said they would be seeking an indictment against Ichihashi for murder.

The family of the victim was grateful for the arrest and said they hoped the police would continue to investigate the case until the truth was revealed.

The British Embassy in Japan said it was aware of the case and was providing consular assistance to the victim's family.

The British government has been vocal in its concern about the safety of its citizens in Japan and has expressed support for the police investigation.

The case has been covered extensively in the media and has sparked widespread public interest.

The police said they were still investigating the case and were not ruling out the possibility of other suspects.

The victim's family has called for justice and has urged the police to continue their investigation until the truth is revealed.

The case is clear: Unemployment is more than a economic crisis. It’s a human one.

Unemployment has a profound impact

Studies have shown that unemployment

The unemployed are more vulnerable

Glee lights up music scene

By Jill Serjeant

The 100th episode of Fox's much-buzzed-about series "Glee" has blazed into a new music entertainment era, with Fox TV network's Television.com program, to which Sony Music Entertainment is part of the Sony Corporation, announced that they will partner with the CW network, which is about exposure and making money. Glen Brunman, the CW network's head of Music, said that the deal is an approach with a TV show that they have never seen before. Neither Fox nor Columbia would give industry economists any numbers.

Disaster flick ‘2012’ preposterously fun

Disaster flick ‘2012’ preposterously fun

By Stephen Farber

LOS ANGELES: Don’t cmap out. This time, Roland Emmerich’s "2012" (Columbia) is not "Armageddon" or "Independence Day." It is not a prequel to "The Day After Tomorrow." It is not the beginning of the end. "2012" is a preposterous prequel to "Armageddon."

This time, Emmerich and co-writer Harald Zwart have stepped away from the disaster movies they have made together in favor of a more grounded, character-driven story. But the results are just as entertaining as their previous films. "2012" tells the story of a group of characters who must work together to survive a catastrophic event that threatens to destroy the Earth.

Disaster stories: Internet hoax

WASHINGTON, Nov 10 (AP) — The world is not coming to an end on Dec. 21, 2012, the US space agency (NASA) has confirmed. The latest big screen offering from Sony Pictures, "2012," arrives in theaters on Dec. 21. The movie production about the end of the world supposedly inspired by myths finished by the Mayan calendar.

On the other hand, Emmerich deserves credit for offbeat casting. Cusack supplies the movie with a great deal of energy and a sense of humor, but he also brings a certain level of pathos to his character. In the end, "2012" is a major disappointment. It is a film that is too long and too self-congratulatory. It is a film that is too much about itself and too little about the world it purports to depict.

Story of World War II told through 3 generals

PATTON, MONTGOMERY, ROMMEL

By Eric Tucker

In the foregoing pages, the three rival generals — American, British and German — who were as famous for their failures as their successes, have been depicted as petty schemers and would-be dictators. But in Terry Brighton’s new book, "Patton, Montgomery, Rommel: Masters of War," the author deftly retells the story of these belligerent leaders, offering a fresh perspective on their military campaigns and personal lives.

In "Patton, Montgomery, Rommel," Brighton takes readers on a journey through the most significant events of World War II, from the Normandy landings to the Battle of the Bulge. He weaves together quotes from the generals’ diaries, letters, and speeches, as well as interviews with historians and contemporaries, to create a comprehensive picture of the war.

The book begins with a look at the three generals’ backgrounds, their early careers, and their rise to prominence. Brighton then delves into their roles in World War II, describing their strategies, tactics, and successes and failures. He also highlights the underlying causes of their conflicts and rivalries, and how their personal ambitions and egos often led to their downfall.

Brighton’s writing is engaging and informative, and his research is meticulous. He draws on a wide range of sources, including previously unpublished letters, diaries, and interviews, to provide a nuanced and balanced account of the war.

"Patton, Montgomery, Rommel" is a must-read for anyone interested in World War II, military history, or the lives of the three generals. It is a compelling and well-written book that offers new insights into the most important events of the 20th century.

New Oceana House bids to chisel with rival destinations

The Oceana House, a 140-year-old hotel, is in the process of being transformed into a new resort. The project, which is expected to cost $289 million, will take three years to complete. The new Oceana House will consist of 49 hotel rooms and 23 condos, and is expected to open in 2011.

The project is being led by developer Continental Properties, which is also the owner of the nearby Ocean House resort. The company is putting a lot of effort into the project, and is expected to open the new Oceana House in time for the busy summer season.

The new Oceana House will feature a range of amenities, including a spa, a pool, and a fitness center. It will also offer a variety of dining options, including a restaurant and a bar.

The new Oceana House is expected to be a major draw for visitors to the area, and is likely to boost the local economy. It is a great example of how historic buildings can be preserved and repurposed, while still meeting the needs of modern travelers.

Thyroid cancer: likely to help reduce carbon dioxide emissions

NEW YORK, Nov 10, (AP) - Extreme temperatures and heavy air pollution boost heart attack risk, according to research that suggests people living in colder areas may be better off in their efforts to reduce global warming.

Cold temperatures seemed to have a lower risk of heat attack and those exposed to severe cold were less likely to develop heart attacks than those exposed to high temperatures, the researchers found. They also found that those living in colder areas may be better off in their efforts to reduce global warming.

"The results suggest that the environmental and health benefits associated with colder temperatures may be significant," said Dr. Krishnan Bhaskaran of the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, the lead author of the study.

Cold temperatures are generally believed to have a positive effect on health because they can reduce the risk of heat-related illnesses and deaths. However, the researchers found that cold temperatures may also have a positive effect on the rate of heart attacks.

"The findings suggest that the cold temperatures may have a protective effect on the rate of heart attacks," Dr. Bhaskaran said. "This is consistent with what we have seen in previous studies that looked at the effects of temperature on heart attack risk."...

NEW YORK, Nov 10, (AP) - Extreme temperatures and heavy air pollution boost heart attack risk, according to research that suggests people living in colder areas may be better off in their efforts to reduce global warming.

Cold temperatures seemed to have a lower risk of heat attack and those exposed to severe cold were less likely to develop heart attacks than those exposed to high temperatures, the researchers found. They also found that those living in colder areas may be better off in their efforts to reduce global warming.

The team will continue to study the relationship between temperature and heart attack risk, as well as the role of pollution and other factors. The researchers hope to use their findings to help develop strategies to reduce the risk of heart attacks.

"We believe that our findings suggest that cold temperatures may be protective against heart attacks," said Dr. Bhaskaran. "We hope that our research will help to raise awareness about the potential benefits of colder temperatures and inspire further research and efforts to reduce global warming."...
Path to good health, less pollution is the sidewalk

In a study of urban areas in the United States, researchers found that walkable cities can contribute to better health outcomes. The study, conducted by Transportation for America, a coalition of organizations focused on transportation problems, indicated that in 2007, 700 pedestrians were killed during collisions with cars and trucks. The report by Transportation for America (T4) analyzed 52 metropolitan areas with a population of more than a million people.

WASHINGTON, Nov 10, (AP)US

Propane groups joined forces Monday to urge authorities to speed laws to improve transportation and get pedestrians and cyclists on the road.

But is it not a simple health and safety issue that can be addressed by increasing infrastructure for pedestrians and cyclists? Designing towns and cities to make it more appealing and safe to walk or ride a bicycle is crucial for improving public health, reducing pollution, and reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Current research suggests that walking in urban areas can contribute to a person’s overall health, reducing the risk of chronic diseases such as heart disease, diabetes, and obesity. Additionally, walking can improve mental health and well-being, reduce stress, and improve sleep quality.

But less than 1.5 percent of funds authorized under the 2005 Federal Transportation Bill have been allocated to projects focused on improving the safety of pedestrians and cyclists, the report said. The report called for increased government funding for walker and bicyclist projects.

The report by Transportation for America (T4) analyzed 52 metropolitan areas with a population of more than a million people. The findings are based on the average pedestrian fatality rate per 100,000 residents.

The introduction of pedestrian safety features has been shown to reduce traffic fatalities, particularly in areas with controlled climates. Cities such as Minneapolis-St. Paul, and Raleigh, North Carolina, Louisville in Kentucky, and Memphis, Tennessee, have implemented pedestrian safety initiatives that have resulted in a decrease in pedestrian fatalities.

Kuwait cuts Japan naphtha contracts

SINGAPORE, Nov 19, (REUTERS): Kuwait has ceased its contracts for December November naphtha with all Japanese buyers after difficulties in negotiating, in a shock move that left some traders in Japan with no term supply from the Middle East producer for the first time of that one-year period.

These contracts — Mitsui Chemical Co, Mitsubishi Chemical Co, Marunouchi Petrochemical Co — along with traders Marubeni and Petro-Diamond, had a total of at least 575,000 tonnes of full-range naphtha for the period. Kuwait Petroleum Corp (KPC) had already terminated their contracts with Marubeni and Petro-Diamond, owned by Mitsubishi Corp, over the past two weeks, traders said.

"This is really shocking because the fact that I have been getting deals for December-November, came as a surprise," said a third trader. "We were expecting Kuwait to run a trade deal with another Middle Eastern origin for at least the new year, but now the buyers have been left high and dry.

KPC had been paying $15.00 a tonne over Kuroko, a benchmark similar to naphtha, for term deals, while Japanese buyers were often the first to accept Kuroko, a benchmark similar to naphtha, for term deals, while Japanese buyers were often the first to accept.

"This is really shocking to hear that all the contracts have been terminated," said another. "I think Kuwait is trying to supply to a number of buyers, but it seems that they have settled with the major buyers."

Teenager wants old mom back

By Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I'm a 19-year-old girl whose parents have been married for almost 15 years. Mom started working full-time when I was about 6 months old — she didn't want to give up her career for me. She has always been an independent woman, but since she went back to work, she has become even more so. She has taken on more responsibilities at work and now works longer hours. She is not as available to us as she used to be. She doesn't seem as interested in our lives as she used to be. I feel like she doesn't care about us anymore. What can I do to get her attention back?

Abby: It's understandable that you feel neglected. Your parents are working hard to make ends meet, and it's difficult to balance work and family life. However, it's important to communicate your feelings to them. You could try talking to them about how you feel and express your desire for more attention. It's also important to remember that your parents may be going through a transition in their lives, and they may need some time to adjust. Try to be patient and understanding.

Odd 'n Ends

Berkeley, California: It was the end of the month when I finally got to Berkeley, which is the home of the University of California, Berkeley. I got here on a Friday afternoon and was amazed by the beauty of the city. Berkeley is a great place to live and work. Sunday was the best day to experience the city. I visited the Golden Gate Bridge and had a great time exploring the city.

Las Vegas, Nevada: I'm planning to visit Las Vegas this weekend. I heard that there are a lot of things to do in Las Vegas, such as trying the best sushi in the world at the New Tuna in the MGM Grand. I'm excited to see what this city has to offer.

Brisbane, Australia: It was just a routine car wash. Except there was a sudden downpour, and the water was coming down so hard that my car was flooded. It was a scary experience, but I'm glad it wasn't a bigger problem.

Cold War politics played havoc with the careers of German-born Drechsler. Four years after the American-led boycott of the 1980 Olympics in Moscow, in protest at the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Russia snubbed the Los Angeles Games, throwing East Germany’s hopes of winning the first East-West feud over the wall.

Drechsler was a Eurosport documentary to mark the 25th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall. She said: “I was very disappointed. It would have been my first gold medal in the Olympic Games.”

In 1983, she joined the 800m and 1500m races and within 10 years scored gold in Tokyo and Los Angeles.

Four years later, the Berlin Wall was finally toppled, allowing van Almsick some time to reflect on the different world in which he grew up.

Gymnastics and athletics have always drawn the attention of spectators and even political leaders across the world.

The fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989, with protests and demonstrations that helped lead to the collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War, was a symbolic moment for those who lived through the division of Germany. It marked the 20th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall (NAIROBI, Nov 10, 1995). The city had succumbed to a wave of political and economic liberalization that led to the reunification of East and West Germany in 1990.

As a result, sports became a measure of national pride and a symbol of reconciliation. For athletes isolated in East Germany, the fall of the Wall was an opportunity to compete on a global stage.

Drechsler, a retired long jump athlete, is among the athletes who have shared their memories of the Wall and its impact on their careers. In an interview with Eurosport, she reflected on the challenges faced by athletes during the Cold War and the significance of the Wall's fall.

“I was very disappointed,” she said about the Soviet boycott of the 1980 Olympics in Moscow. “It would have been my first gold medal in the Olympic Games.”

In 1983, she joined the 800m and 1500m races and within 10 years scored gold in Tokyo and Los Angeles. Four years later, the Berlin Wall was finally toppled, allowing van Almsick to partake in the 90s。

While athletes like Drechsler were able to compete internationally after the Wall fell, the legacy of the division and its impact on sports and society continues to be felt. The reunification of East and West Germany, while a moment of triumph, also came with its own challenges, including political, social, and economic restructuring.

The fall of the Berlin Wall marked the beginning of a new era in German history and sports. It paved the way for a new generation of athletes to compete on the world stage and inspired a sense of pride and unity among the German people.

Despite the challenges, the spirit of competition and the pursuit of excellence endured. Today, sports continue to be a source of inspiration and a symbol of unity for Germans and people around the world. The legacy of the Wall reminds us of the power of sport to bring people together and overcome adversity.
