Experts urge to stop killer robots

Davos, Switzerland, Jan 25, (AFP) The world must act quickly to avoid a future in which autonomous robots with artificial intelligence管理工作, the UN high commissioner for human rights, Zeid Ra'ad al-Hussein, said in Davos on Friday said it will over- manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de- bates in Davos. There are many countries and many representatives in the international community that really want to manage their continued deployment and lead to the liquidation of human labor. It may be too late, he told de-