Cambodia: The Supreme Court on Wednesday, ruled on a petition by former prime minister Khieu Samphan, clearing the way for his arrest over the allegations of genocide in the 1970s. The court found that the charges were not time-barred and that there was evidence to proceed with the trial. The decision came as a surprise to many, as the court had previously granted Samphan's request for a retrial based on new evidence. The ruling now means that Samphan is likely to face trial in the near future.

Uganda: Four people were killed on Monday when attacks by suspected Taliban members on a military camp in the capital, Kampala, turned violent. The attack, which lasted for several hours, resulted in the deaths of four soldiers and several civilians. The government has not yet released any details about the attackers or the motives behind the attack.

South Sudan: The government has announced the deployment of additional troops to the border with Sudan to strengthen security and prevent any potential cross-border incursions. The troops will be sent to the border areas in Western Equatoria and Northern Bahr el Ghazal states, where tensions have been escalating.

US SENDS MARINES TO JUBA

The US has announced the deployment of additional troops to Juba, South Sudan, to support the UN peacekeeping mission. The deployment comes after a spike in violence in the city, with reports of armed attacks and civilian casualties. The US forces will be stationed at the UN Mission in South Sudan base and will work closely with the UN peacekeepers to provide security and support.

No pandemic today. China has no cases, and the US is almost there. Many people are returning to the streets, and businesses are opening up, but the risk of new outbreaks still remains. The World Health Organization (WHO) continues to monitor the situation closely.

El Salvador's murder toll tops 3k: US sends Marines to Juba

The US has announced the deployment of additional troops to Juba, South Sudan, to support the UN peacekeeping mission. The deployment comes after a spike in violence in the city, with reports of armed attacks and civilian casualties. The US forces will be stationed at the UN Mission in South Sudan base and will work closely with the UN peacekeepers to provide security and support.

No pandemic today. China has no cases, and the US is almost there. Many people are returning to the streets, and businesses are opening up, but the risk of new outbreaks still remains. The World Health Organization (WHO) continues to monitor the situation closely.

El Salvador's murder toll tops 3k: US sends Marines to Juba

The US has announced the deployment of additional troops to Juba, South Sudan, to support the UN peacekeeping mission. The deployment comes after a spike in violence in the city, with reports of armed attacks and civilian casualties. The US forces will be stationed at the UN Mission in South Sudan base and will work closely with the UN peacekeepers to provide security and support.

No pandemic today. China has no cases, and the US is almost there. Many people are returning to the streets, and businesses are opening up, but the risk of new outbreaks still remains. The World Health Organization (WHO) continues to monitor the situation closely.