FRANKFURT, April 4, (RTRS): Mercedes-Benz owner Daimler will launch a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.

The source, an executive at Daimler, said in a statement it was launching a self-driving taxi service as early as next year with financial backing from a $700 million fund that has been set up by co-founder Ralf Speth, a source told Reuters on Tuesday.