WASHINGTON, July 19, (AP) — President Donald Trump is making a last-ditch effort to find some version of President Barack Obama’s health care law that could win support from enough Republicans to help escape at least some of the blame.

The Republican-led House and Senate initially struggled unsuccessfully to come up with a good plan on the GOP’s years of promise to replace and replace former President Barack Obama’s health care law. The Republican-led House had passed legislation to do so before the health care bill had failed. Trump signed McConnell to testify in a meeting with some Senator pressure last week, only to send many of the Senate. Still, he’s making a last-ditch effort to find a way to force the Senate’s majority leaders and Senate Republicans to the White House for lunch Wednesday, to get senators on record on the issue and move to other pressing business like the upcoming August break. The ACA also takes time to make insurance more costly, which could be a problem for the insurance companies, especially in states with tight budgets. By contrast, the new Republican health care plan would likely have a smaller impact on the budget.

That head-scratching outcome would be a recipe for chaos. With no good options for Republicans or Democrats, it looks like the ACA is here to stay at least for a while. According to a report from the nonpartisan Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation, the ACA has helped more than 20 million Americans gain health insurance since its implementation in 2014. At least 12 million of those are in states that have expanded Medicaid as part of the ACA.

But Chandra’s anxiety swept back in April when she heard about the GOP effort to repeal and replace the health care plan with an alternative. She was looking for some certainty in her future and was frustrated by how long it was taking to get a decision on the new law. William, Kate take ‘charm offensive’ to Germany

Prince William and his wife Kate, the Duchess of Cambridge, have arrived in Berlin on a state visit that is seen as part of a broader push into continental Europe. The visit is the first for the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, who are accompanied by their young children.

The trip, billed as a “charm offensive”, is expected to improve relations between Germany and the UK, especially after the Brexit referendum and the rise of the far-right in the German government.

LONDON, July 19 (Reuters) - Britain's Prince William and his wife Kate the Duchess of Cambridge visit Berlin on a three-day state visit to Germany, Thursday, July 19, as part of a charm offensive to repair Brexit divides and strengthen ties in Europe.

May seeks to ease ‘Brexit fears’

May, the British prime minister, is expected to press the EU for softer terms in the Brexit negotiations.

LONDON, July 19 (Reuters) - British Prime Minister Theresa May will call on Wednesday for a Brexit that leaves the UK and the EU “as close as possible”, amid suggestions she is preparing a “soft Brexit”. May is to meet with the European Commission’s Brexit negotiator, Michel Barnier, on Thursday.

May is under pressure to soften her stance on Brexit, following a string of damaging comments from the EU and her own party.

The Daily Mail, a right-wing newspaper, has been critical of the Tory government’s austerity policies, which have led to cuts in public services.

The newspaper has called for a “Green Plan for Jobs and Growth”, which would see more investment in green energy and infrastructure.

The paper has also called for a “National Investment Bank” to finance large-scale projects.

The government has been accused of being “out of touch” with the electorate, and of prioritising the interests of the wealthy over those of ordinary people.

The Daily Mail has been accused of being “sleazy” and “tabloid-like” by some of its critics.

The paper has also been criticised for its coverage of the royals, and for its support for Brexit.

Dissidents call for a “soft Brexit”

Some Conservative MPs have called for a softer Brexit, which would see the UK stay in the single market and the customs union.

The move has been seen as a bid to win over Brexiteers, who have been critical of the government’s approach to Brexit.

The move has been met with resistance from the Prime Minister, who has been under pressure to stick to her original Brexit plans.

Controversial anti-terror bill clears hurdle

Military chief quits after Macron row

July 14, 2017
PARIS—A protest by French President Emmanuel Macron over the country’s latest security bill has forced the defense minister to resign, after a row that escalated amid fresh concerns about the country’s ability to tackle terrorism.

The row has continued to divide about whether Macron had handled the military or whether he had no choice but to start his authority are two months into his

The row flared after Macron, in a speech about the terror attacks that have killed more than 200 people since 2015, said he couldn’t predict attacks accurately by those who access information through the military and police sources. After the row, his government said it would respond to the demand by seeking new powers to monitor and stop the most significant attacks.

The resignation took place after Macron met with the military chief, who had been treated as a strong ally in his efforts to toughen anti-terror laws in France in the wake of last year’s attack.

The row began when Macron, a former leader of a small party, was named defense minister in 2015, after his campaign to strengthen the military in the wake of the attack.

Macron and others have defended the military’s work in the fight against terrorism, saying it is vital to the country’s security. But critics have accused the government of being too slow to respond to the threat.

The military has had to respond to the country’s latest terror attack, which occurred in June 2016, when an attacker killed four people in the French city of Nice.

The military has been criticized for failing to prevent the attack and for its response to the country’s latest security threats.

Germany has delayed signing a deal with Israeli industrial giant ThyssenKrupp.

Minister Miki Ganor, former head of the foreign ministry's industrial division, was taken for questioning on Monday by the Israeli military court in the West Bank.

Steudtner, who lives at a compound in rural Pennsylvania, said he was arrested Feb 14 in Istanbul. Turkish authorities have given him consular access.

"This is not a legitimate investigation," he said, adding that he "wants to return to my family and work and have nothing to do with Ankara."

Nizar Zakka, 50, was rushed to a hospital on Monday after a fast of 27 days following his arrest in February. Israeli authorities remanded him in custody for two months.

Merkel blasted the arrests of six human rights activists who were imprisoned by Turkey on terror charges last week. Germany has called a "despicable" episode.

Merkel said the case was another example of innocent protesters, including activists, being "illegally" arrested in Turkey.

"It will be difficult to push forward the peace process with Turkey," the German foreign minister said. "I can't see that there is a meaningful" to Ankara.

Merkel said that while relations between Germany and Turkey were strained, they were not broken.

"There was, however, no reshuffle in major ministries," she added.

Western countries have condemned the event as a "human rights violation" and called for Israel to bring those responsible to justice.

The Israeli army said it was investigating the attack, which occurred after a rally by right-wing Hebrew activists in Jerusalem.

"N.Korea incapable of accurate US hit"

WASHINGTON, July 19 (Agencies) - North Korea also appeared to strike the United States "with any degree of accuracy" while it Enables missiles to hit its targets, making its latest test a "serious provocation", a US defense official said on Tuesday.

Until Tuesday it had conducted its first test of a experimental ballistic missile (ICBM), and it was to evaluate the reliability and survivability of its nuclear weapons.

The General Paul, speaking after the Senate hearing, however, was skeptical about the accuracy of its ICBM. "I am not sure that North Korea has the capability to strike the United States with any degree of accuracy," he said.

Many have sharply warned North Korea about the new missile test. "It is just a matter of time before such a weapon is used to strike the United States," said a ranking US military official.

But General Paul, speaking before the Senate Armed Services Committee on Tuesday, the day before the test, said he "is not sure that North Korea has the capability to strike the United States with any degree of accuracy." He said that the test was a "serious provocation".

Pakistan's interior minister, Rashid Dostum, has been shot and killed his senior officer at a border checkpoint with Turkmenistan on Wednesday, police said.

Dostum, 69, was the former leader of the Northern Alliance who fought against the Taliban and was a key ally of the US during the war in Afghanistan. He has been a vocal critic of President Ashraf Ghani, whom he sees as a traitor who sold his people to the Taliban.

Dostum was killed in a shootout with Afghan soldiers, police said. They said his body was found at the border checkpoint near the town of Chashmah-i-Sharif in Jawzjan province, close to the border with Turkmenistan.

Dostum had been living in exile in Turkey since being forced to leave Afghanistan in 2015. He had returned to Afghanistan last month to visit his family and to take part in the presidential election later this year.

He had been under house arrest in Turkey for more than a year and was granted a temporary release by Turkey's government to visit his home province.

Dostum was a key figure in the Northern Alliance, which was the anti-Taliban group that fought against the Taliban during the war in Afghanistan. He was a close ally of US President George W. Bush and was a key figure in the war against the Taliban.

CARAGAS, July 19 (AP) — Opposition leader Nicolas Maduro said that controversial plans to rewrite Venezuela’s constitution will proceed even after President Donald Trump’s threat of "economic sanctions" against the country, on Tuesday. "The opposition" to the leftist regime over weekend saw some violence.

President Pedro Pablo Kuczynski said he decided to pardon the country’s imprisoned former leader, Alberto Fujimori, according to a poll by Ipsos published on Monday. "Most Peruvians jailed and they would follow him with a prostituted public so I had no other choice," Kuczynski said in a televised address. The former leader has decades of tense relations, dating back to the time of Hugo Chavez, Maduro’s mentor and predecessor who died in 2013. "Maduro, speaking late Tuesday to the United Nations, warned of unspecified “strong and exemplary punishment.”

Brain scans to change care for ‘memory loss’

WASHINGTON, July 19 (AP) — A new type of brain scan that can reveal the underlying cause of memory loss may allow doctors to avoid sending patients to expensive Alzheimer’s tests.

The technique is expected to provide doctors with more information than other, existing scans that can detect the disease. It could also help families make decisions about the best course of treatment for their loved one.

The scans, called PET scans, are usually performed on patients with dementia who have symptoms of memory loss. They involve injecting a radioactive substance into the body, which then accumulates in the brain and can be detected by a scanner.

The new technique, called ‘amyloid-detecting’ test, involves a different approach. Instead of injecting a radioactive substance, it uses a technique called single photon emission computed tomography (SPECT).

This allows doctors to see the areas of the brain most affected by the disease, which can help guide treatment decisions.

The technique was developed by researchers at the University of California, San Francisco, who have been using it for several years.

“With this new technique, we can see where the disease is starting to affect the brain, which is really important for planning treatment,” said lead researcher Dr. Guadalupe Baez, a neurologist at the university.

The results of a study using the new method were published in the Journal of Neurology, Neurosurgery & Psychiatry.

The study included 100 patients with dementia, half of whom had Alzheimer’s disease and the other half with other types of dementia.

The researchers found that the amyloid-detecting technique was more accurate than PET scans in identifying the underlying cause of memory loss.

The technique is still in the early stages of development, but it shows promise for improving the diagnosis and treatment of dementia.

The researchers are now working on developing a commercial version of the technique, which could be available within a few years.

The study was funded by the National Institutes of Health.

When even a few of the greatest spectacles carry a strong whiff of preproduction, try taking in the air of Luc Besson’s sci-fi opera “Valerian and the City of a Thousand Planets.” The ambitious — albeit in color, plastic form in some cases — also marks a hodgepodge of more seasoned summer entertainments. Watching “Valerian” is simultaneously entertaining and mind-numbingly unappealing, which is a curious mix of work from so many other big films (stilted performances, muddled understandings) and aptly what the more controlled studio projects do much better (parade-pushing, self-important writing).

The brouhaha surrounding the project for the French filmmaker that’s been called the most expensive undeveloped idea in the movie market, would’ve been handled. But also noteworthy, “Valerian and the City of a Thousand Planets,” adapted by Besson from Pierre Christin and Jean-Claude Mezieres’ comic book “Valérian et les Îles du Millénaire,” is the plot as far back as when Besson started the project; Radcliffe consoling the victim in Los Angeles.

“It’s almost another metaphor for their relationship — Besson as the larger-than-life explosive personality who makes statements and even bigger moves, and Silla as an underdog who’s willing to go a little harder because she knows everyone thinks he’s too busy,” he adds, somewhat and much, much smaller.

As a result, the movie’s occasionally extraordinary. There are pop-culture clichés of blue and gold, following familiarity and friendship — or what has harmoniums of diversity, and the film’s in the opening scene, the protagonist is a movie parallel to “Pulp Fiction.” Besson-Silla has a desk too. And they’ve taken their time with it. Besson did a large number of changes and world-building himself before he even got near the camera. As a result, the movie feels both familiar and unique. The story is an origin story, told from the perspective of the main characters, and it’s a story of ambition and the need for change. The film is a testament to the importance of having a vision and sticking to it, no matter what the cost.

“People used to say, ‘We needed another Star Wars. People need to be excited by the film,’” Besson says. “But I gave them Star Wars, and they didn’t want it. They wanted something different.”

Besson says he was inspired by the “Star Wars” films, but he wanted to do something different. He wanted to create a story that was as unique and exciting as possible. And he did.

LOS ANGELES: After on-screen love interest Jenny Slate proved to be a special warm-up for Baby, the “Landline” star, movie, it was her turn to step up to the plate. And she did. In her signature large-framed glasses, was announced at the 2017 Toronto International Film Festival as having been cast in the lead role of the indie film “Landline.”

Jenny Slate is a rising star in the independent film world, having starred in such hits as “Obvious Child” and “Trainwreck.” She has a unique comedic style that has won her a devoted following. Her role in “Landline” will certainly help to cement her reputation as one of the most talented young actresses on the scene.

LOS ANGELES: Dave Bautista and Aubrey Plaza have inked a deal to star in “Landline,” a comedy film directed by Gillian Robespierre and written by Elisabeth Holm. It’s tart, sad, honest, funny, and sometimes you wonder why? What can we say? The 1990s were weird. (“Remember the 1980s?"

The film is set in the early 1990s, a time when technology hadn’t yet made its mark on our lives. It’s a time when people still wrote letters and used payphones to make calls. The film follows the story of a young couple who falls in love and decide to start a family.

“Landline” is a beautiful reminder of a time when things were simpler and people didn’t have to rely on technology to communicate. It’s a story of love, loss, and the feeling of being stuck in time.

A year ago, Alisa Clickenger helped organize a cross-country motorcycle trip for women to commemorate the 100-year anniversary of a most amazing ride by two sisters from Beverly Hills.

Clickenger feared the women could be military motorcycle couriers, able to ride more than 5,000 miles (8,000 km) across the country to prove that women could ride motorcycles as well as men.

Clickenger says she isn't concerned that her company’s trips cater to women limits her company’s appeal. “I do hope that women we encountered along the way have become empowered,” she said.

Clickenger organized an all-female motorcycle trip last October, and she identifies with the credo that the only limit is your mind. “For me, part of riding motorcycles still is the challenge of embracing the unknown, the mastery of machine and also facing my fears and meeting the challenges of the extended motorcycle adventure,” said Clickenger, whose company focuses solely on extended motorcycle adventures.

Dear Abby

Woman still mourns years after death of her ‘lover’

By Abigail Van Biven

Dear Abby:
I don’t know what to do. I was married for 15 years. We had one son, who is now 19. My husband died days ago and it shocked us all. I imagine it was even harder on my son. I was close to my husband; he was the love of my life.

As long as you don’t discuss it at work, it must appear that your wife has no need for counseling. But if she did not discuss it at work and is acutely depressed, she might be thinking about suicide. It is better to consult a mental health professional.

If you are single, you will meet someone of significance in late summer. It is possible you may be in for a rude awakening. You might also consider taking a break from the dating scene.

If you are not in a relationship, your needs will be less pressing.

Dear needs help:
I was close to my husband. I want to keep his memory alive. What should I do?

Dear All:
We were close friends outside of work, but we didn’t see each other often. He was killed in a car accident days ago. My grief is overwhelming. I want to keep his memory alive. What should I do?

A riveting psychological thriller that investigates the nature of truth and the meaning of justice, Rashomon is considered one of the greatest films ever made. Four people recounts different versions of the story of a man’s murder and the rape of his wife, which director Akira Kurosawa (Seven Samurai) presents with striking imagery and an ingenious use of flashbacks. This eloquent masterwork and international sensation revolutionized film language and introduced Japanese cinema.

WASHINGTON, July 19, (AFP): The first child in the world to have a new hand transplant is alive and well after undergoing surgery to replace his hands, including serious diabetes, cancer and infections.

Doctors reviewed both the successes and the challenges Harvey and his family have faced, noting that a large team of specialists was hard at work supporting him through all the ups and downs.

Sandra Amaral, a doctor at Children’s Hospital of Philadelphia, where the operation took place, said: “He continues to improve as he undergoes daily therapy to increase his hand function, and psychosocial support to help deal with the ongoing demands of his surgery.”

The boy’s移植手移植 donors were his 18-year-old brother, who had a similar cancer, and another child with leukemia who had died.

It was only when Harvey was 7 years old and doctors discovered he could move his fingers, that his mother, who had dreamed of helping her son to do this for years, decided to take him to hospital in Boston.

Within days of the surgery, Harvey was able to dress and feed himself through adapted equipment.

Harvey was already receiving immunosuppression drugs and a steroid. His mother hoped he would one day be able to drive, dress himself, brush his teeth, and eat and chew food.

The donor hands became available in April after the older boy received a kidney.

The child has “undergone eight re-operations during the fourth and seventh months after transplanting,” said the report. “All of these were reversed with immunosuppression drugs without impairing the function of the child’s hands.”

Harvey’s transplant was performed in the US in 2015 and the boy is benefitting from his surgery.

His mother hoped he would one day be able to dress himself, brush his teeth, and eat and chew food. Harvey, for his part, started to reach for objects he used to reach for 8 months after receiving the hands.

Harvey’s transplant surgery was “a success,” said the report.

Most adults gain weight as they age, with modest amount of weight gain may have important health consequences.

In the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s National Diabetes Statistics Report, released today, the agency highlighted conditions that are “highly preventable” and which are linked to a “higher risk of death.”

US researchers said Tuesday.

‘Consistent with previous trends,’ the report said. “Our study is the first of its kind to systematically examine the association of weight gain from early to middle adulthood with major health risks later in life,” said senior author Frank Hu, professor of nutrition and epidemiology at Harvard University.

The study was based on survey data from more than 92,000 people, tracked from 1976 until 2012.

Libya aiming for oil output of 1.25 mln bpd this year

Libya's oil minister has reportedly said the country is aiming for a monthly output of 1.25 million barrels per day (bpd) by the end of the year, a new target that would see production rise from its current figure of 700,000 bpd.

The announcement came in a telephone interview with Reuters by Akram Mabsout, Libya's minister of oil and mineral resources.

"We are aiming to produce 1.25 million bpd by the end of the year," Mabsout said. "This is for this year and we are not going to make any promises for next year."

Oil prices decline for second straight month

Oil prices fell for a second straight month in June, with Brent crude closing at $74.1/bbl and $71.7/bbl on Friday and Monday, respectively. The slides were attributed to a combination of factors, including a rise in the number of oil inventories, weak demand and concerns about the global economic outlook.

The worldwide surplus of crude oil is expected to continue through the summer, putting downward pressure on prices. Brent and WTI are now trading at their lowest levels since early May.

Weekly metrics on these two dynamics are, along with the price of US oil, the most closely watched data by the markets. And they have not told the market what it wants to hear.

The weekly report from the US Energy Information Administration (EIA) showed that US crude oil inventories fell by 4.6Mb in the week ending June 29, to 469.9Mb. But this was less than the 5.1Mb draw expected by analysts.

The EIA also showed that US crude oil production fell by 0.2Mb in the week, to 9.7Mb, which is the lowest level since January 2016.

Weekly data from the American Petroleum Institute (API) showed that US crude oil inventories fell by 4.7Mb in the week ending June 29, to 473.2Mb. But this was also less than the 5.1Mb draw expected by analysts.

Weekly data from the International Energy Agency (IEA) showed that global crude oil inventories rose by 1.4Mb in the week ending June 24, to 3.25 Tb. But this was less than the 1.5Mb draw expected by analysts.

Weekly data from the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) showed that OPEC crude oil inventories fell by 5.1 Mb in the week ending June 24, to 258.8Mb. But this was less than the 5.3Mb draw expected by analysts.

Samsung Electronics said its Baby voice assistant for smartphones will start shipping in the second quarter of 2016.

The South Korean tech giant said starting next month, users of the Galaxy S5 smartphones can speak in American English and Korean to ask for directions, for example. Users can also use the function to search for, say, places from a location on a map.

Samsung did not say why it could not make Baby in English available to users outside South Korea or the US when it will become available in other languages later this year.

The roll out of the Baby English version in the US and South Korea is the first expansion of the software to regions outside its home market.

Samsung's move is the latest development in a global arms race among smartphone manufacturers to offer a mobile assistant with English capabilities.

Apple's Siri voice assistant, which first appeared in its 2011 iPhones, is now available in a number of languages, including Japanese, Chinese and Korean.

Google's voice assistant, Google Now, was originally available only in English when it appeared in the Android smartphones in 2011. But in 2014, the company introduced it in a number of languages, including Spanish, French and Korean.

Microsoft's virtual assistant, Cortana, also has been available in English since the 2014 debut of Windows 8.1 and Windows Phone 8.1.

All of these assistants are intended to make the smartphones easier to use and help companies sell more devices.

Samsung said the voice assistant can be activated by saying “Hi Baby” in English or Korean.

As for what Baby will do when activated, Samsung did not offer details.

Samsung plans to expand the function to other languages and regions later this year.

The company has not announced how it plans to sell or distribute the English voice assistant.

Samsung did not comment on why it has decided to release the service in South Korea and the US but not elsewhere.

Samsung, the world's largest smartphone manufacturer, is currently facing its worst sales slide in years as consumers are choosing cheaper rivals like Apple and China's Huawei.

Its move comes as Apple is focusing more on its iPhone sales, which are surging in China, and Google has partnered with a number of high-end smartphone makers to offer its assistant on their phones.

Baby could give Samsung a competitive advantage in the US and South Korea, where its Galaxy S5 smartphone was released in May.

In this file photo, the Baby function of the new Samsung Electronics Co. smartphone is seen in New York. Samsung Electronics Co., the world's largest manufacturer of smart phones, said Monday it will introduce a mobile assistant in English but only to two countries: South Korea and the US.

Hagar The Horrible — By Chris Browne

The current cabin was re-created and built near Independence in 1977, during the peak of popularity for a television series based on Laura Ingalls Wilder’s books centered on her childhood. Wilder spent a year with her family at the Kansas site in 1869, the Wichita Eagle reported.

Siblings Bill Kurtis and Jean Schodorf, who own the cabin, said four decades of weather in Kansas has worn down the house. They want to rebuild it and add a barn.

“We will be using any of the materials that are salvageable for the new cabin,” Schodorf said last week. “But really, that may be just the windows, floors and maybe the fireplace chimney.”

Schodorf’s mother, Wilma Kurtis, inherited the land from her grandparents. She and her husband, retired Brig Gen William Kurtis, lived on the property and discovered in 1968 the farm was the site of the Ingalls homestead.

“We have been cleared for zoning and an environmental study that had to be done— all the modern regulations,” Schodorf said. “We’ve jumped through all the modern hoops and paid for an architectural study and signage and two sculptures.”

She said that more than 20,000 people visit the site each year. But with the current cabin drooping and logs weakening, its interior is barred from the public for safety reasons.

“We get people coming here just to see the site because their child has read the book,” Schodorf said. “We want them to experience the prairie.”

About $30,000 has been raised to rebuild the cabin, but the owners need nearly $20,000 more to help pay skilled craftsmen. (AP)

PORT JEFFERSON, New York: A dog that saw a baby deer in danger of drowning in New York jumped in and dragged it to shore.

The daring rescue in Long Island Sound was caught on video by his owner Mark Freeley. He tells WCBS-TV that he was taking the English golden retriever named Storm on a walk Sunday morning when Storm “just plunged into the water and started swimming out to the fawn, grabbed it by the neck, and started swimming to shore.”

Freeley says animal rescuers soon arrived and the deer ran back into the water. They used a rope to pull the fawn back in.

The fawn is recovering at an animal rescue center. (AP)

Twichell claims first US gold of Budapest worlds

Defending water polo champions US beat Spain 12-8

BUDAPEST, July 19 (Agens- ness): Ashley Twichell won the US Open's first gold medal of the Budapest world championships on Wednesday with victory in the women's five-kilometer open water event.

It was her first individual title at that event but she won silver with her team at the last two world championships.

Twichell, who also won gold in the 2013 championships at Barcelona, finished in 1:59:31.09 to lead Spain's Mireia Belmonte Garcia and Italy's Francesca Dallapolla, who both took bronze.

Belmonte Garcia was second in 1:59:31.52 and Dallapolla was third in 1:59:31.55.

Two previous third-place fi nishers, Italy's Olga Zuloaga and France's Mylène Bulliard, were eliminated from the fi nal nine.

The famed tournament is the end marker down at Hull KR. Hopefully, we can hit home what it means to this town and the sport.

Meanwhile, former rugby league world cup winner Russell Crowe had some contradictory feelings over this weekend after the players return from Budapest.

"I am to poker what Donald Trump is to politics - an instant sensation," he said.

"We've got to fi ght and battle for ever- ything," he said.
