KUWAIT CITY, Dec 7: MP Osama Al-Shaheen emphasized the importance of temporary committees and their tremendous role, considering the fact that just a short period remains for the National As-inadequate number of volunteers in the committee or the lack of time for the agenda.

The MP explained that the Na-

the progress, as the MPs wanted time and speed in the work, indicating that they should have had the appropriate time for starting work for the new formation of the

forming temporary commit-

for the task.

On the other hand, MP Abdul Al-

Ali stressed the importance for people with disabilities is one of the most important temporary committees in the current National As-early formation of this com-

"Some three hundred years ago, hunger was rampant among the middle and lower classes and the rich and powerful could spend their entire fortune on a single meal. A man named Emile Chartier, who was a inhabitant of Paris, wrote a letter to Louis XIV asking for a law that would make it illegal for them to waste food. The King told him: 'You want to legislate against me? Well, I'll see what I can do about it!' Ever since that night, the French have been good at living on their food, and even a beggar, for instance, refused to accept charity.

"The answers were too many and too long, from various quarters. Here is a sample: 'It is not easy, but it is not impossible. Blah, Blah, Blah.' Yes, 'Oh Your Highness my beloved! I do not understand...it is so complex...it will take time.'"

WASHINGTON, Dec 7 (Reuters) – President Donald Trump’s administration said on Monday it would no longer require asylum seekers to prove they face threats at home to be eligible for temporary protected status, in line with a new directive from the US Congress.

The move comes after Trump had expressed a desire to soften the asylum criteria as a way to limit the numbers of migrants who enter the United States and pressure President-elect Joe Biden to toughen up on immigration.

LONDON, Dec. 1 (AP).- Countries from Egypt to Mexico could lose 95% of their income from coral reef tourism, and pairs of Anglo-American scientists said the tourism industry — worth billions of dollars today, could be valueless if warming continues.

“Action in reducing emissions really needs to be taken now, as we face the very biggest impacts on oceans and people,” said Didier Queloz, one of the paper’s authors. The United Nations also addressed the marchers.

“Everything is at stake,” she said.

Los Angeles: Director and composer Bruno Antony released the official soundtrack to the Netflix film “The Elephant Queen” on Dec. 13. The music is inspired by both the author’s waterfront home and by the one he learned to sail on as a child. It reflects a quest to capture the simplicity and wonder of America’s natural landscapes, and it features an array of remarkable musicians, including Black Sabbath drummer Bill Ward and Pogues frontman Shane MacGowan. The soundtrack also includes a number of original compositions by Antony and a cover of the folk standard “The Answer Is吹 the Wind.”

In this case, it remade the original 1945, with the latter re-marrying “Gone With the Wind” actor Leif Anderson, played by Robert Walker. The movie’s plot centers on a young couple (played by Walker and John Hodiak) who fall in love and then fall apart for a time. At one point, they are seen standing on a street corner, looking at each other and holding hands. The music, “It's a Small World After All,” is one of many that is featured in the soundtrack. The film was released just two years after Walker’s death and is considered one of his most important roles.

Los Angeles: Composer Michael Sheehan, known for his work on films and TV shows, including “The Command,” “Star Wars: Episode VII – The Force Awakens” and “The Crown,” has released his first studio album, “Bad Vibes Forever.” The album features 10 tracks, each with a different style and mood. The first single, “What You Need,” is a pop rock song with catchy hooks and a strong beat. The second single, “Heartbreak,” is a more experimental track that combines elements of electronic and folk music. The album also features guest appearances from a number of other musicians, including the late Kurt Cobain.

Los Angeles: The Moog IIIc synthesizer, a Mellotron, the Hammond B-3 organ and the Fender Twin Reverb were used to create the sound for the documentary “The Apollo Program.” This is the third in a series of five albums released by the band, each one exploring a different aspect of space exploration. The album features a mix of electronic and acoustic sounds, creating a unique and immersive listening experience.

Los Angeles: Lyme disease is a tick-borne illness that can be transmitted to humans through the bite of an infected tick. Symptoms include fever, headache, fatigue, and skin rash. The disease is spread by black-legged ticks, which are commonly found in wooded areas. The disease is treatable with antibiotics, but it can be difficult to diagnose early in its course.

It features contributions from a number of well-known musicians, including Black Sabbath drummer Bill Ward and Pogues frontman Shane MacGowan. The album also includes a cover of the folk standard “The Answer Is吹 the Wind.”

“A Villiers and the Sons of Sindbad”, a stunning photography exhibition opens at Amricani Cultural Centre

The exhibition “A Villiers and the Sons of Sindbad” tells the story of Kuwait’s rich heritage. The event was attended by DAI Director General Sheikha Hussa Sabah Al-Salem Al-Sabah and Dr. Grace Pundyk, a well-known maritime historian.

Villiers was an author, adventurer, photographer and traveler who devoted most of his life to the sea. He was an Australian doing in Kuwait what he was doing in the Arabian Sea: preserve this memory both for Kuwaitis traditions and way of life, and sometimes forgotten maritime history and traditions.

In researching Alan Villiers, Christopher Villiers, the eldest son of Alan Villiers attended the exhibition opening. He stated: “Alan always felt a great privilege to call the Kuwaiti Archipelago as his own. He always admired at their quotidian practices and way of living among the Kuwaitis.”

Christopher Villiers said, “Villiers discovered that the niche that he has now uncovered was the region of Kuwait maritime history, Alan in his long and adventurous life, was lucky enough to record many ports, rituals, and stories by extraction in the modern world.”

Kevin Sumption, the Director of the Australian National Maritime Museum, said, “Tonight is a very important night for the Australian Museum, said, “Tonight is a very important night for the Australian Museum, said, “Tonight is a very important night for the Australian Museum, said, “Tonight is a very important night for the Australian Museum.”

Some of the photographs by Villiers are on display in the exhibition.

Dr. Grace Pundyk learned about his book the day before his death in 1982, though he was the only one who had photographed and written about the history of the Arabian Sea. His photographs and memoirs are now on display at the exhibition.

Measles kills 140,000 and infects over 10 million:

LONDON, Dec 7, (RTRS): Measles infected nearly 10 million people in 2018, the World Health Organization said on Thursday.

In figures described by its director general as "an outrage", the WHO said most of last year’s measles deaths were in children under five, and that the vast majority of these had not been vaccinated.

“Measles is 100% preventable,” said Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus. “It is a tragedy, a terrible waste of human life and resources. It is the world’s most vulnerable children, those who have been denied the chance to live healthy lives, who are suffering most.”

Outbreaks

The United States has already reported the largest number of measles cases this year since 1992, the agency said, with outbreaks at schools in 19 states and one county in Alaska. - Also in the Czech Republic, Greece and Britain - last year’s WHO “measles-free” status in 2018 after suffering large outbreaks.

An outbreak in the South Pacific island of Nauru, where the country’s president said 2,430 people and killed more than 350,000, is being complicated by a royal wedding vaccination movement in 2018, measles killed 140,000 and infecting a three-fold increase in case numbers compared with the same period in 2018.

Tedros said themissive outbreaks were being fuelled by dangerous diseases such as whooping cough and diphtheria, and adding: "The world is failing these children."

WHO said most of last year’s measles outbreaks were linked to the same vaccine-preventable disease. It added: “If we are to protect our children, we must understand and address the reasons why measles outbreaks are increasing.”

The move is part of the WHO’s efforts to prevent a range of infectious diseases, and to increase the number of children who are vaccinated.

WHO said it was working closely with member states to identify outbreaks and work towards elimination of the disease. The WHO also said that the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) has noted a rise in the number of children who are not vaccinated.

UNICEF children’s fund executive director, Anthony Lake said: “Vaccine demand is increasing, and we are seeing a three-fold increase in case numbers compared with the same period in 2018.”

By June 2019, 80% of children will have received the necessary vaccinations and other diseases could begin to be eliminated.

Outbreaks

According to the CDC, 6,139 measles cases were reported in 2018, 80% of children received the necessary vaccinations and 134 cases were caused by vaccine-preventable diseases.

In an effort to prevent outbreaks, the WHO has recommended that countries ensure that people are vaccinated against measles.

OPEC, Russia agree to cut oil output

Turkey has seen Brent crude fall from a peak of $75 in April after US sanctions on Iran and Venezuela limited world supply, but lingering trade tensions between the US and China dampened economic expectations pushed prices back down.

Brent crude oil hovered near $63 per barrel Thursday. The price of US crude West Texas Intermediate was about a quarter of the North Sea's.

"The devil will be in the details when it comes to any agreement" by oil and gas analyst Justin Low at brokerage ForexLive.

He says that Iraq, Nigeria and Russia have not been producing more than their expected quotas. The group is expected to prolong a cut of 1.2 million barrels per day from next year, if not earlier.

The central bank has said it will raise its key rate to 12.5% from 14% next week, a median estimate was for a 150-basis point rate cut at next week's policy meeting. Further cuts are expected in the future to bring real rates below levels in recent years.

The sticking point in the talks appears to be how to share the production cuts work?

OPEC's decision of last Friday will maintain oil prices in the range of around 260,000 barrels a day per day for non-OPEC members but not for members.

"We have decided to reduce production by 500,000 barrels per day through the first quarter of next year," said Rumhi.

"We have agreed oil reduction, namely Iraq and Nigeria?" by analyst at brokerage ForexLive.

"The sticking point in the talks appears to be how to share the production cuts work?"

OPEC has indicated it wants its oil production re-calculated with crude oils from various parts of the world. The continued posting of shale oil from other non-OPEC countries will reduce and stick to their quotas in the future.

Certainly, the oil market is not optimistic that prices will go down, but hopefully not below the median estimate was for a 150-basis point rate cut at next week's policy meeting. Further cuts are expected in the future to bring real rates below levels in recent years.

Algeria's state-owned Sonatrach says it will block the access to its fields for the independent oil company in the Gulf to raise their way after Saudi Arabia亲爱，I/O announced it will cut its crude production by 500,000 barrels per day from next year, if not earlier.

Maldives to restructure debt

The Maldives foreign minister says his country needs to restructure its international debt by 2021. The money is needed to help alleviate the country’s economic situation. It is not clear how much debt Maldives currently owes.

The Maldives, located in the Indian Ocean, is facing a severe economic crisis. The country has a high government debt ratio and a low foreign exchange reserve. The government is struggling to meet its debt obligations, which could lead to a default. The Maldives has been working with international organizations, such as the International Monetary Fund (IMF), to come up with a debt restructuring plan. The plan includes a debt moratorium and a rescheduling of debt payments.

Aston Martin not actively pursuing new investors

Aston Martin, which was reported a week ago to be the target of a strategy that would see the company raised on the stock exchange, said Friday that it was not actively seeking new investors on Friday, and it opened trading on the London Stock Exchange.

The initial report, published by FTI Consulting on Wednesday, had said that the company was being considered as a potential candidate for a public listing with a valuation of up to £4 billion ($4.9 billion). The report had suggested that the company was considering a range of options, including a sale of a minority stake to an existing company, a separate listing of its automotive operations, or a complete flotation of the business.

Aston Martin has denied the report, and it said in a statement that it was not actively seeking new investors. The company said that it had no plans to raise capital in the near future, and it was focusing on its strategic objectives and long-term growth.

The statement was released on Friday, urging Washington to negotiate a new deal to replace the controversial World Trade Organization (WTO) system in the midst of the biggest re- form in its history in November. The report by the European Union (EU) members met with a mixed reaction, but it is clear that the WTO is facing significant challenges as it tries to oversee international trade.

France rejects US proposal to impose digital trade tariffs

France, Spain and Austria among the group of countries that will likely be subject to digital trade tariffs.

France has rejected a US proposal to impose tariffs on digital sales, including online services, by member states. France is one of the countries that have expressed concerns over the proposed tariffs, which were introduced as part of the US Trade Act of 2018.

The US proposal, which would impose tariffs on digital sales, is aimed at countries that have introduced digital taxes on tech companies. The tariffs would apply to digital sales, including online services, and would be based on a percentage of the revenue generated by the tech companies.

France has been a strong critic of the US proposal, and it has been advocating for a multinational solution to the digital tax issue. The country has been working with other countries to come up with a global solution to the digital tax issue.

The US proposal has faced opposition from several countries, including France, which has been pressing for a multinational solution to the digital tax issue. France has been advocating for a solution that would be based on a consensus approach, with each country contributing to the global solution.
