Countries deadlocked

Talks dragged beyond deadline, rifts remain

MADRID, Dec. 14 (AP) — Countries remained dead-locked Tuesday night as they struggled to reach a last-minute deal that would allow them to meet their climate obligations.

“[We] have the science. We have the collective will to respond to the challenge of history. We have the resources,” said Alden Meyer, a climate policy special at the Union of Concerned Scientists.

What’s been the case for the past 30 years is that no one is shown the almost total dis-appearance of great species cutting targets was the United States, which under the Trump administration has sought to withdraw from the Paris accord. The country, which has lost some 20% of its original habitat, is nearing an irreversible tipping point. Brazil itself is at a crossroads. When it comes to climate, what we fought for is at stake.”

Brazil’s Amazon at a crossroads

TRADE-OF — Brazil’s Amazon at a crossroads

A woman looks at a World globe at the COP25 climate talks congress in Madrid, Spain on Dec 13. Officials from almost 200 countries are scrambling to reach an agreement at the United Nations climate meeting amid growing concerns that key issues may be postponed for another year. (AP)

TRADE-OF — Brazil’s Amazon at a crossroads

A woman looks at a World globe at the COP25 climate talks congress in Madrid, Spain on Dec 13. Officials from almost 200 countries are scrambling to reach an agreement at the United Nations climate meeting amid growing concerns that key issues may be postponed for another year. (AP)

TRADE-OF — Brazil’s Amazon at a crossroads

A woman looks at a World globe at the COP25 climate talks congress in Madrid, Spain on Dec 13. Officials from almost 200 countries are scrambling to reach an agreement at the United Nations climate meeting amid growing concerns that key issues may be postponed for another year. (AP)