Dinar doesn't fall from sky

By Ali Ahmed Al-Raghib

WE have heard and seen with our own eyes the phenomena of some futures and current MNPs becoming wealthy suddenly. However, we are to wake up from the shock of the fact that several owners of MNPs participated in a real auction in the market of the city with uncountable MNPs, which consider one of their uncountable auction and bought the same for KWD 2 million.

Even just a few years ago, these parliamentarians say w w t 111. They did not believe in giving one million dinars from one. They did not know the importance of the million dinars from the other. They did not feel the importance of the million dinars from the others. They did not feel the importance of the million dinars from the rest.

"It is a chance for the Kuwaiti MPs, not only get acquainted with discussions and experiences of their peers but also draw on valuable experience from them to drive it forward on each question raised at the meeting," Al-Nisf said.

KUWAIT CITY, Oct 16: The Ministry of Health (MoH) has for the first time approved the specifications for the purchase and sale of generic drugs in the State of Kuwait, in order to lay the foundations and standards to ensure the safety of all generic drugs and follow-up the marketing of branded drugs, reports Al-Rai Daily.

The Al-Dostar news network quoted a source in the Kuwaiti Ministry of Health as saying that the decision was made as an attempt to increase the use of generic drugs and reduce the cost of healthcare. It added that the use of generic drugs is cheaper than branded drugs, and that the use and dosage issues of some effects on the form and color may vary from company to company.

"This difference does not affect the effectiveness and safety of the drug, but varies according to commercial standards as happens with branded drugs," the source added.

The Kuwaiti delegation praised the meeting of the International Parliamentary Union and praised the role of the United Nations, especially the Security Council, in mediating the conflict and working towards a peaceful resolution. The Democratic presidential candidates faced their first biggest showdown of the 2020 campaign when they debated for 90 minutes on Wednesday night. It was the first time they were all in the same room and on the same stage, and the candidates from both parties were determined to show that they were the favorite to be the next president.

The candidates faced off on a variety of issues, including healthcare and taxes. While the debate was contentious, it also allowed the candidates to present their ideas and policies to the American people.

The Democratic candidates also debated the role of the government in providing healthcare to all Americans. They agreed that the government should play a role in providing healthcare, but they disagreed on the specific role and how it should be funded.

The Republican candidates, on the other hand, argued that healthcare should be a market-driven system, and that the government should only be involved in providing a safety net for those who cannot afford it.

The debate was a clear indication of the divided American electorate, and it is likely that the candidates will continue to debate these issues in the coming months.

The impeachment inquiry continues to gather momentum, with more and more Democratic members of Congress calling for Trump's removal from office.

The Republicans are not taking the impeachment inquiry lightly, and they have already started to mount a defense of the president.

The House Democrats are determined to see the impeachment inquiry through to its conclusion, and they are not willing to back down in their efforts to remove Trump from office.

Brexit talks soldier on, summit looms

BRUSSELS Oct 16 (AP) - The European Union and Britain's chief negotiators face a series of challenges today to try to reach a Brexit deal before the Oct 31 deadline. They are both under pressure to deliver a deal, but it remains unclear whether they will succeed.

The British government has said it will not extend the Brexit deadline, and it has ruled out the possibility of a second Brexit referendum.

Owl vs owl: Should humans intervene to save a species?

Owl vs owl: Should humans intervene to save a species? Whether the northern spotted owl’s rapid decline in the 1990s was a game changer for conservation. In this Oct 23, 2018 photo, Dave Wiens, a biologist who works for the US Geological Survey, stands in a forest near Corvallis, Ore, as he uses a remote control to trigger a signal that engages a specially adapted camera to capture an image of a barred owl. Wiens and his team have been using this approach since 2015 to improve data on owl populations and behavior.

The federal government has been trying for decades to save the northern spotted owl, a bird that sparked an intense battle over logging across Washington, Oregon and California. The Spotted Owl conservation plan that was put in place in 1990 called for a 20 percent reduction in the number of acres of old-growth forest on federal land to protect the owl’s habitat. But the population continued to decline.

Meanwhile, researchers, including Wiens, began questioning whether the plan was working. They speculated that barred owls competing with spotted owls for food and space were hurting the spotted owl’s chances for survival. If so, expanding the barred owl’s range and habitat could help both species.

Wiens, who works for the US Geological Survey, and his team have been using remote-controlled cameras to photograph barred owls. The cameras are equipped with radio transmitters and are triggered by owls as they fly by.

The goal is to improve data on owl populations and behavior. Wiens and his team have been using this approach since 2015 to improve data on owl populations and behavior.

The team has captured images of barred owls in Oregon, Washington and California, and they are now expanding their efforts.

“Barred owls and spotted owls can live together, but we need to manage the barred owls to protect spotted owls,” said Wiens, a biologist who works for the US Geological Survey. “We need to find ways to reduce the number of barred owls in the spotted owl’s range.”

Wiens says the barred owl population in the Pacific Northwest has more than doubled since 2000, and the birds are expanding their range into areas where spotted owls live. The barred owl has a larger range and can tolerate a wider range of habitat conditions than the spotted owl.

The barred owl’s larger range and tolerance for a wider range of habitat conditions may be contributing to the spotted owl’s decline, Wiens said. The barred owl is also a more aggressive predator and can outcompete spotted owls for food and nesting sites.

Wiens and his team are now扩大ing their efforts to study barred owls in Oregon, Washington and California. They hope to gather more data on barred owls and their interactions with spotted owls.

“I think, to go one step further, that we will continue to document the barred owls and their interactions with the spotted owls,” Wiens said. “Our goal is to use the data we gather to inform future management decisions.”

Prof Salam Diab presents weekly lecture

Prof Diab talks on ‘kitchen in ancient Arabic manuscripts’

KAUF CITY, Oct 16: Professor Salam Diab presented a lecture titled, ‘The Kitchen in Ancient Arabic Manuscripts: A Lexical Study,’ at the Yarmouk Cultural Centre on Monday evening, as part of the Dar Al Athar Al Islamiyyah’s 25th cultural season.

Diab is a Professor at Universite Grenoble Alpes in France. She is responsible for the Arab and Eastern Section, and is also the Director of the Research Centre for Oriental Studies (CREO) within the Institutes of Languages and Cultures of Europe, America, Africa, Asia and Australia (ILCEA). Her research focuses on Arabic linguistics, with emphasis on the lexicography and lexicology of standard and dialectal Arabic, the relationship of semantics and phonetics in Arabic, and the electronic study of domain-lexicological variation. Her other areas of research include the epic of Mashreq, prosody of contemporary Arabic poetry, Arabic in foreign literatures, and contemporary Arabic methods among others. She has translated manuscripts into French, as well as contemporary Arabic literature such as ‘Lexical Substitution and Creativity in Arabic: Compilation, Theorisation and Restructuring’, and ‘Kitchen and its Etiquette in Ancient Manuscripts: Lexicological Study’.

In her lecture, Prof Diab noted that as Arabs had always been interested in food and written several food-related books, she discussed one of the earliest indications of this in the Arab-Muslim civilization looking at the fifth chapter of the Quran titled, ‘The Table’. She demonstrated that such importance for food among Arabs was not just limited in the worldly life, as the Quran mentions the luxury of eating in Paradise.

The expected result of this interest is a rich lexicon in the culinary field and culture. She also informed the audience of another important facet – table etiquette, which as a whole, developed considerably throughout the Arab conquests and through contact with other old civilizations.

Prof Diab highlighted the keen interest in food as shown by the related lexicon in terms of ingredients, preparation, cookware and cleaning, and matters of hygiene for the chef and kitchen. The lecture delved into a study of four volumes of cookbooks that date back to between the 10th and 13th centuries.

Losing phone number can put financial, digital life at risk

Don’t ignore signs of financial abuse

By Liz Weston

In the heat of the moment, it’s easy to lose sight of the financial abuse that’s occurring in your relationship. But it could also be a partner who ofﬁcially can’t keep a job or pay their share of the rent. They can use this to control you. Here’s how to get access to them. Bank staff can’t access your backup phone. Sometimes the scam artists bribe your partner’s friends to get you to bring your phone. Whenever you do, they’ll save a backup.

Dear Abby:

Divorced mother gets a cold shoulder at events

Dear Abby: I am a 57-year-old divorced mother of five and grandmother of eight. My marriage to her father ended over 30 years ago because he was physically and emotionally abusive. I raised my five children alone. One son is my partner and the father of my first two children. A year ago he remarried, which resulted in having one more child with his new partner. My middle child is also remarried, which resulted in having one more child with his new partner. My younger three children are single. I am friends with four of my children, but the fifth child has been estranged from me for over three years. I am devastated that my children willingly keep me at a distance. My younger grandchildren are not aware of their grandfather, and I have been told that their children will grow up without knowing their great grandfather. I need help with how to approach my children so they can mend the rift. I have tried calling them but no one answers the phone. I have sent a letter of restitution to her (my grandchild’s half-sister) through her mother and received no response. I feel like (what’s on today)

I would like to know if there are any other classes that you recommend.

Dear Abby:

Seniors can use VR for travel & health issues

Researchers say virtual reality can aid seniors who have moved away from the places they used to live. Some seniors have “turned to virtual reality to know what it was like to travel without them,” said Zoe Katleman, a project manager at the Center for Accelerated Biomedical Innovation.

According to a study published in the Journal of Alzheimer’s Disease, the technology could also prove effective.

The researchers found that in-person travel was critical for older people to maintain social relationships and improve quality of life. But for those with mobility issues or other health problems, VR could be an alternative.

The study involved 48 older adults aged 65 and older who were divided into two groups: one that used VR to explore different cities and locations, and another that used traditional methods such as photos or videos.

Researchers noted that while both groups improved their knowledge of the locations they were exploring, those in the VR group showed greater improvements in their ability to recall details and engage in conversations about the places they visited.

The results suggest that VR could be a valuable tool for seniors who wish to maintain their social connections without leaving their homes.

Health

Among the findings is that seniors who have engaged in virtual reality before becoming pregnant may be likely to have babies with birth defects than those who have not.

Researchers who suggest the travel industry address these issues.

Obesity is a common condition and is linked to many health problems, including diabetes, heart disease, and certain types of cancer.

Bermuda Bowl final for the 2000 world championship, the U.S. women's team was finishing second in the Netherlands in the Venice Cup by the marginal margin in the history of a world

The fractional margin was the result of slow-play penalties assessed against both teams in one of the 35-drafts. Because the Americans were judged to have been more responsible for the slow play, they incurred a 353-IM penalty, while the Dutch were penalized 125.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16, (KRT): They were one of the worst teams in baseball two months into the season, so of course the Washington Nationals were in no mood to stay patient with a World Series appearance within their grasp.

The Nationals used a seven-run first inning to snare a 7-4 victory over St Louis Cardinals on Tuesday and stuck to a four-game sweep of the National League Championship Series.

A World Series to the nation’s capital has been a long haul to project in the spring. The Nationals were an afterthought through much of the season, not getting past the NL division series until the Oct 17 game.

"What a group of guys and what a fun ride,“ Nationals manager Dave Martinez said from Montreal on Monday. "This is above and beyond. This is one of the best teams I’ve ever managed."

Gerrit Cole dodged trouble at times during the first inning and tossed 99 pitches during the first inning, the most he’s thrown in any inning.

The Astros backed Cole with early runs against Cole, who was drafted by the Yankees and then traded to the Astros for six minor leaguers last July.

The Cardinals struck out 49 times in the series; the season’s high was 44, by the Yankees.

Randy Arozarena’s double scored the first run of the series in the fourth inning. The Nationals pulled off the four games.
