The GSMA delayed the show from its original date of February, because of COVID-19 concerns. Its cancellation at the last minute last year was one of the few big names that will have a presence this year.

Granryd said he’s expecting 25,000 to 30,000 people from 140 countries to attend in person, a fraction of the 250,000 to 300,000 people who normally come to the show in person.

Other visitors will be attending as online exhibitors, with 250 companies attending mainly online and a few online-only. Attendees are required to wear masks, check their temperatures at the entrance, and use sanitizing gel on their hands.

New trends in technology are expected to be showcased at the event, such as the latest in 5G and edge computing.

The GSMA, which oversees the show, is also working with local authorities to ensure a safe environment.
