Maximizing GDP ... this is not how camels are watered

WE return again to agricultural and industrial holdings to emphasize that solutions are possible if there is a serious vision for increasing national income.

Agricultural and industrial holdings are among the most important avenues of a productive economy that can contribute to the state budget and help bridge the deficit.

If the goal of distributing farms to citizens is to enhance food security and strive for self-sufficiency, then a second goal should be to enable the owners of these holdings to earn a living from their income and prevent further losses to public funds.

Therefore, those who have utilized small plots to support their production at no cost to the state should not be penalized as if they have committed a major crime.

On the contrary, they should be supported for their innovation, as they have simply reduced the burden on public funds. Moreover, if taxes were applied to these projects, the beneficiaries would likely pay them willingly and happily.

For example, last week I visited a farm that its owner had transformed into a bird sanctuary, housing birds of every species and equipped with facilities for a restaurant and café. The farm was visited by members of the diplomatic corps in Kuwait, as well as citizens and residents. The owner bears all costs personally because he is prohibited from establishing a café, restaurant, or any other business.

There are dozens of similar cases where farms have been subject to decisions restricting their activities, and owners have been threatened with severe penalties if they attempt to launch projects that would increase their income.

In fact, these are the very people who drive the local economy.

Visibility crashes amid dust storm

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15, (KUNA): Strong winds and dusty conditions affected the country on Sunday, reducing horizontal visibility to less than 1,000 meters in some areas, particularly in open areas.

The Acting Director of the Meteorological Department Dhirar Al-Ali told the Kuwait News Agency (KUNA) that weather maps and numerical models had indicated that the country would be influenced by an extension of a high-pressure system accompanied by a dry air mass with northwesterly winds that ranged from moderate to strong, with speeds between 25 and 50 kilometers per hour.

The dusty winds led to reduced visibility in several areas and caused sea waves to rise to more than six feet. The weather was generally warm during the day with blowing dust, turning relatively cool at night as dust gradually began to settle in the evening.

Maximum temperatures ranged between 26 and 28 degrees Celsius, while minimum temperatures fell between 15 and 17 degrees Celsius.

What happened, what's happening, what will happen!

By Ahmad alsarraf

IT will take a long time before we fully understand what occurred on Little St. James Island and in the homes and yachts of Jeffrey Epstein, due to the sheer volume and complexity of the documents he kept, as well as the large number and high standing of those associated with him, even after his conviction and imprisonment for heinous crimes.

The American judicial system deserves credit for its diligence in safeguarding these documents from alteration or destruction since their seizure, despite the serious secrets and scandals they reveal that implicate members of the House of Windsor, some of the world's wealthiest individuals, as well as geniuses, philosophers, inventors, current and former heads of state, prominent politicians, and others.

It is clear that Epstein's activities on any of his properties were carried out under his strict control.

The aim was clearly not entertainment or historical documentation, but rather to use the material in the future to blackmail those involved, serving the interests of those who built Epstein's global persona, through wealth, connections, and influence, from a once obscure teacher who had not completed his studies. Such an entity cannot have honorable or legal objectives. These actions reflect a political agenda linked to Israel.

There is no dispute about the heinous criminal acts that occurred on Little St. James Island and elsewhere, exposing a vast network involved in exploiting girls and trafficking minors and adults for sex.

However, some parties have added layers of rumors and stories about alleged satanic practices, including torture, murder, drinking of blood, and even cannibalism of children.

There is no documented evidence of this to date. What is certain is that many girls, most of them minors, were forcibly or deceptively transported to the island on private planes, their movements restricted, and they were prevented from leaving freely, according to the Attorney General of the U.S. Virgin Islands, which has jurisdiction over Epstein's island.

No one knows why Epstein did not destroy the documents and evidence implicating himself and hundreds of his guests and collaborators. These individuals fell into two categories. The first included celebrities, intellectuals, artists, inventors, and philosophers, who were used to attract the second group, consisting of politicians, heads of state, and high-ranking officials.

This latter group represented Epstein's primary target, so he reportedly installed hidden cameras throughout the island, in bedrooms and even bathrooms, recording meetings with these individuals to blackmail them politically or financially in the future, often on behalf of the entity believed to be behind him, widely thought to be Israel.

From a medical and scientific perspective, many experts agree that there are no proven or tested health benefits to drinking human blood, and that the practice is extremely dangerous, both physically and psychologically.

Claims that consuming blood grants special mental powers or eternal youth are scientifically unfounded.

Some individuals, however, support the so-called "adrenochrome" theory or narrative, but each side maintains its own viewpoint.

From a scientific standpoint, this discussion may be unrelated to any actual desire for "adrenochrome."

It is strange that so many thinkers, philosophers, scientists, the extremely wealthy, and global business figures were guests of Epstein over the years. This stands in stark contrast to the staggering number of children who go missing annually due to kidnapping, running away, getting lost, or family conflict, amounting to nearly eight million. Even if 90 percent of them were returned to their families, some 800,000 children would still have an unknown fate. The United States ranks highest in missing persons, despite not being the most populous or the poorest country.

The truth about what occurred in these places, particularly on that remote island, remains largely hidden. It represents one of the most heinous crimes in modern history.

A DIGEST OF PUBLIC OPINION

Tolerance, self-control safe way out in muddle

“THE most dangerous thing we face today is not the abundance of voices, but the scarcity of minds that truly know how to listen,” Kuwaiti writer Lawyer Yousef Rashid Al-Hajri wrote for Al-Seyassah daily.

“The world no longer suffers from a lack of opinions, but from an excess of emotions, to the point that noise can sometimes masquerade as truth. The loudest voice almost convinces people that it is the most correct one. We live in an era of speed, where news is born in the morning, becomes a topic of public opinion by evening, and is forgotten the next day.

Yousef Al-Hajri

“Amid this acceleration, judgment is often based on reaction rather than careful reading, and on fleeting emotion rather than sound reasoning. History shows a different truth - great transformations were not achieved by those who rushed headlong into the storm, but by those who stood firm until they understood the direction of the wind. A calm mind does not mean coldness, and careful deliberation does not mean hesitation. It is a rare ability to distinguish between what deserves emotion and what deserves thought, between fleeting noise and enduring truths.

“Crucial decisions are not made under momentary pressure, but within a space of awareness that allows a full understanding of the situation. Today’s societies are more vulnerable to rumors and more easily divided by a fragmented statement or a clipped excerpt. With the rise of communication technologies, information no longer needs proof to spread but it only needs someone to share it quickly. This is where the value of a balanced individual becomes clear, as it would be someone who is not swept away by every trend and does not allow their mind to become a battleground for chaos.

“Leadership, at its core, is not about a boisterous presence, but about insight. Not every battle is worth fighting, and not every provocation deserves a response. Sometimes the greatest decision is self-control, because those who possess composure hold their own decisions, and those who hold their decisions control their path. Balance and wisdom, not haste, are the common traits of figures who have left a profound impact on their societies. These individuals understood that prestige is not asserted through a loud voice, but built on confidence that needs no display.

“The most dangerous challenge a person can face is not a powerful adversary, but a moment of weakness in which they abandon their reason. Many words spoken in a moment of anger have destroyed years of hard work. Many hasty decisions have opened doors that were not easy to close. On the other hand, situations handled calmly have changed the course of crises. How many silences have been more eloquent than a thousand words? We do not need more shouting as much as we need greater awareness. It is not important who speaks first, but who understands first.

“The difference between an ordinary person and a true leader is that the former is driven by events, while the latter anticipates them before they unfold. Always remember that composure is not weakness, but an advanced form of strength, because self-control is far more difficult than trying to control others. In a world of clashing opinions and growing polarization, a calm mind remains a safe haven.”

Also:

“A heartfelt thank you to the First Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Interior, Sheikh Fahad Al-Yousef, for returning the Fahad Al-Ahmad, Jahra, and Andalus-Reqqai markets to the Kuwaiti Farmers Union, the primary representative of Kuwaiti farmers,” Dr. Ahmed Zaid Al-Azmi, former head of the Wafra Agricultural Cooperative Society wrote for Al-Seyassah daily.

“We remind everyone that this long-established union is not a profit-driven or commercial entity. It was founded in 1974 to support Kuwaiti farmers and ensure fair regulations. It was therefore the union’s responsibility to divide and distribute the markets among productive farmers, and create new sales outlets for both producers and consumers. Expanding sales outlets for farmers and consumers encourages innovative and diverse production and helps break the monopoly on agricultural products sales.

“Good news for Kuwaiti farmers and producers! Today, you have access to the union’s market in Ardiya, the Wafra market in Sulaihiya, the Andalus-Reqqai market, the Fahad Al-Ahmad market, and the Jahra market. More opportunities are on the way. Kuwaiti farmers also have a dedicated section in consumer cooperative societies. Also, a law now requires each of the more than eighty consumer cooperative societies to purchase 75 percent of their vegetable needs from local produce sold in Sulaihiya or Ardiya, using fresh Kuwaiti products.

“This complements the seasonal farmers’ markets in Abdali and Wafra held at the end of each week, as well as cooperative societies dedicating one or two days weekly to local agricultural produce. The future for Kuwaiti farmers is bright.”

“The phrase “supreme interest” appears in Article 13, Paragraph 4, of the Kuwaiti Nationality Law No. 15/1959 and its amendments - “... if the supreme interest of the State, or its external security, so requires, (and in this case) nationality may be withdrawn from those who acquired it by dependency.” This means that the withdrawal of nationality from children and spouses is discretionary for the competent authority and applies specifically to naturalized citizens,” Dr. Kazem Bou Abbas (doctorate in International Law from the University of Edinburgh in the United Kingdom), wrote for Al-Seyassah daily.

“This paragraph was added as Paragraph 4 by Law No. 70/1966. A similar phrase appears at the end of Paragraph 3 of Article 14 - “or a judgment has been issued convicting him of crimes which the judgment stipulates affect his loyalty to his country.”

“In this context, the concepts of supreme interest and loyalty to the homeland convey the same meaning. However, Article 14 applies to both naturalized citizens and those born in the country. If an individual is found to have committed an act affecting loyalty to the homeland, the matter centers on two concepts - loyalty to the homeland and the supreme interest. The two articles provide clarification and elaboration on these cases.

“At that time, the legislator aimed to expand on this issue and later specified penalties through Law No. 31/1970, which amended the Penal Code to address crimes against internal and external state security, offenses related to the performance of public duties, and bribery. The explanatory memorandum introduced the concept of “supreme interest,” applying it “if the competent authorities possess evidence that the individual is promoting principles that could undermine the country’s economic or social order, or that he belongs to a foreign political entity.”

“Meanwhile, the public interest is broader and more comprehensive, encompassing the welfare of society as a whole and the well-being of its members, both now and in the future.

It represents the fundamental objective of the law, and any administrative decision aimed at purposes other than this is considered illegitimate and an abuse of power (see Dr. Ahmad bin Bouha, The Social Contract in Rousseau, Journal of Anthropology and Social Sciences, University of Sidi Bel Abbas, 2017, Algeria).

“The supreme interest, on the other hand, refers to the highest strategic national interests that transcend both public and individual interests. It relates to the state’s existence, survival, stability, and continuity. It is connected to the state’s foundations, constitutional principles, security, and preservation of its sovereignty. The supreme interest may require exceptional decisions to safeguard the stability of the political, social, and economic system, and it can justify extraordinary measures to ensure the security of the state.

“The supreme interest, as mentioned in Article 13, Paragraph 4, highlights the threat to the country’s security posed by a person who has acquired citizenship. Such an individual does not merit the honor of citizenship or the benefits of nationality, making it the obligation of the authorities to revoke their citizenship. It is important to note that Articles 13 and 14 focus on a single issue - harming the interests of the state or violating loyalty to the homeland.

“In conclusion, whether the harm concerns the supreme interest and loyalty, or the broader public interest, revocation of citizenship is justified if a person commits any of the offenses stipulated in these two articles. This measure serves the legitimate aim of preserving national security, protecting the state’s supreme interests, and upholding loyalty to the nation and its ruler. However, the application of these provisions should be limited and carried out only through a transparent investigation by the competent authorities, in accordance with international conventions and norms, and guided by the principles of justice and the rule of law.”

Contract details eyed

Transparency stressed in construction accord

By Inaas Awadh

Al-Seyassah/Arab Times Staff

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Municipal Council member Farah Al-Roumi submitted a proposal to amend Article 14 of Administrative Decision No. 161/2009, which regulates the classification and licensing of construction and demolition contractors at Kuwait Municipality.

The proposed amendment aims to strengthen transparency and organize the financial and contractual relationship between property owners and contractors.

At the heart of the proposal is a requirement obligating contractors to provide the Kuwait Municipality with a copy of the contract signed with the property owner before commencing any construction or demolition activities.

The contract must be comprehensive and clearly outline the project timeline, the scope and stages of work, the total agreed contract value, and a detailed payment schedule.

In addition, Al-Roumi’s proposal requires the inclusion of a clause stipulating that payments must be made exclusively to the contracted company, while obligating the contractor to issue official receipts for all amounts received.

On the objectives behind the proposed amendment, Al-Roumi disclosed that it is intended to ensure contracts are formally registered with the Municipality prior to the start of work in order to define the obligations of both parties, and to establish a structured and transparent payment mechanism.

She confirmed that this step will improve financial governance, minimize disputes, and protect the rights of all stakeholders.

She also indicated that the initiative complements the ongoing efforts of the Municipality to modernize the contractor classification and licensing framework, align it with contemporary standards, and raise the efficiency of administrative oversight.

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: The First Circuit of the Court of Cassation issued a final and binding ruling, upholding the life sentence imposed on a man in his 60s and a woman for kidnapping a 13-year-old girl, assaulting her, and forcing her to consume drugs and alcohol, up to the point that she lost consciousness.

This life sentence was initially handed down by the Criminal Court after finding the two defendants guilty of kidnapping, assault and forcible administration of substances.

The Court of Appeals then upheld the sentence, which the Court of Cassation confirmed by rejecting the final appeal of the defendants.

In a separate aspect of the case, the court confirmed the acquittal of the victim’s father who was charged with sexually assaulting his daughter in a case filed by Attorney Athbi Al-Kandari, representing the mother of the victim.

The father was acquitted due to insufficient evidence that did not meet the conclusive proof standard required for a conviction.

Municipality sets flag-raising rules ahead of National Day

No commercial use or damaged flags

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Kuwait Municipality issued comprehensive guidelines on Saturday regarding the correct way to raise the national flag during National Day celebrations, reports Al-Seyassah daily.
In a press statement, Director of Public Relations and official spokesperson for Kuwait Municipality, Muhammad Al-Sendan, emphasized the importance of following official regulations and respecting the symbolism of the Kuwaiti flag to instill national values among citizens and residents.

He stressed that the national flag should be raised quickly and lowered slowly, steadily, and respectfully, ensuring it is clean, undamaged, and free of tears.

Al-Sendan highlighted common violations, including raising a torn or improperly displayed flag, or positioning it upside down with the black stripe on the right side of the flag-pole or the red stripe at the top.
He also stressed that the flag should never be marked with writing or drawings, touch the ground, or be displayed permanently on private buildings.

Al-Sendan warned against using the national flag as a trademark or for advertising purposes, noting that respecting its symbolic nature is the responsibility of every citizen and resident.
He called on all residents to comply with the regulations to reflect a civilized and dignified image of the State of Kuwait during its national celebrations.

On the second day, US Secretary of

His Highness Sheikh Ahmad Abdullah Al-Ahmad Al-Sabah, Prime Minister, and his accompanying delegation returned to the country Sunday after heading the State of Kuwait’s delegation participating in the 62nd Munich Security Conference.

State Marco Rubio reaffirmed that US-European ties remain “inseparable,” while expressing doubts about Russia’s willingness to end the Ukraine war and criticizing the United Nations’ performance in conflict resolution.

nently in leaders’ remarks. Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy expressed readiness for a just and lasting peace, while European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen backed strengthening Europe’s collective defense commitments.

Maximizing GDP ...

These pressures are compounded by the annual rent that owners of agricultural or industrial holdings must pay on schedule. If circumstances force them to delay payments, they face hefty fines that could threaten the viability of their projects, even if they have benefited from the holdings for 30 or 50 years.

Such pressures can drive some beneficiaries into bankruptcy, whereas in most countries, land used for productive projects becomes the property of the investor.

Why not transfer ownership of all industrial and service holdings in Shuwaikh and elsewhere to the beneficiaries, instead of requiring them to pay annual rent?

Taxes could be applied to the goods produced by these holdings, which would encourage trade and stimulate consumer spending.

It is well known that countries do not adopt measures that hinder the work of individuals and institutions; instead, they support and assist them in reducing the burden on the state.

In such countries, business owners are not restricted or subjected to daily inspections, and judicial powers are exercised only within the bounds of the law, not as a tool to retaliate against investors.

Oversight in these countries is conducted solely for the benefit of all, and investors are not weighed down by excessive costs.

Budget deficits are not solved by reducing salaries, arbitrarily increasing fees, or making impulsive decisions.

Such measures drive investors and business owners out of the market, leading to a contraction of the local economy.

On the contrary, budget deficits are addressed and national output is maximized by encouraging productive and industrial projects, reducing the food import bill, and establishing modern factories, medical facilities, and educational institutions.

These initiatives stimulate production, after which the state can impose fair taxes, as is done in other countries.

Court greenlights

In addition, the court affirmed that the legislature’s authority to regulate rights is discretionary and carries a presumption of constitutionality, provided that it remains within constitutional boundaries and is aimed at serving the public interest.

The core of this authority lies in choosing the most suitable regulatory alternative to safeguard legitimate public interests—a standard the court found to have been met by the contested law.

It was also pointed out that the legislature recently enacted Decree-Law No. 78/2025, amending certain provisions of Law No. 17/1973 concerning court fees.

According to the explanatory memorandum, the main objective is to preserve the right to litigation while addressing the growing number of frivolous lawsuits.

This legislative step was prompted by the fact that more than 50 years have passed since the original Court Fees Law was enacted without amendment, despite major economic and social changes that resulted in a steady rise in the number of cases filed in courts.

A reassessment of court fees became necessary to align them with contemporary realities, without undermining the essential balance between ensuring access to justice and maintaining the efficient and orderly functioning of the judicial system.

Under this decree-law, the legislature adopted a measured and equitable increase in court fees.

This was accomplished by raising the percentages of proportional fees applied to cases of a specified value, which are collected progressively according to defined brackets, and by introducing a minimum fee.

Moreover, the fixed fee for cases of unspecified value was reviewed, and the fees for notifications, announcements, and other legal documents were also increased.

It was confirmed that the decision to increase court fees falls within the authority of the legislature to impose charges for particular services provided by a public authority to those who request them.

Such fees are levied in return for judicial services in order to compensate the State for the costs incurred in delivering those services and to promote their proper use.

In determining these fees, the legislature considered the need to strike a balance between safeguarding the right to litigation and ensuring that the cases filed in courts are serious.

The new law regulates the procedures and conditions for exemption from court fees, ensuring that any litigant who demonstrates inability to pay may be exempted, taking into account that the burden of these fees ultimately falls on the losing party, as the one who caused the case to be filed.

This entails that the legislature established a comprehensive framework governing the assessment of court fees, detailing the method of calculation, identifying the party initially responsible for payment, and defining the scope of exemption for those who prove financial hardship.

The law also refers to the Civil and Commercial Procedures Law with respect to the mechanism for challenging the assessment of these fees and determining the party liable for payment.

It is not permissible to interpret selected provisions of this regulatory framework in isolation from the rest in a way that contradicts the overall legislative intent.

If the fees are imposed in consideration of judicial services requested, then the requesting party is required to pay the prescribed amount, which does not constitute an impediment to accessing the courts or an infringement of the guaranteed right to litigation.

Accordingly, in a recent case, the court decided—sitting in chambers—not to admit the appeal and to confiscate the guarantee.

Art tells documented the realities of war, including loss and displacement, as well as expressions of social solidarity and national determination.

She pointed out that the EU delivered comprehensive support packages to Ukraine, including military, humanitarian and financial assistance, in addition to support for the energy and cultural sectors.

She stressed that “it is the aggressor who must make concessions, as there is no moral equivalence between the aggressor and the victim.”

She also made comparisons between Kuwait in 1990 and Ukraine in 2022, highlighting how both nations strengthened national unity, identity and sovereignty during the invasion. She reiterated the commitment of the EU to a rules-based international order and adherence to the United Nations (UN) Charter.

Meanwhile, Ukrainian Ambassador to Kuwait Maksym Subkh said Ukraine continues to defend its freedom, sovereignty and territorial integrity, indicating that the Ukrainians have shown remarkable resilience throughout the four years of war.

He called on the attendees to observe a minute of silence in memory of the civilians and children who have lost their lives since the onset of the invasion.

He praised the supportive position of Kuwait regarding the sovereignty of Ukraine and expressed gratitude for Kuwaiti assistance, particularly the provision of generators to sustain the critical electricity sector during power outages.

The event concluded with a display of photographic works by Eduard Kryzhanivsky, the official photographer of the Ukrainian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, accompanied by a musical performance featuring compositions by Ukrainian and European composers.

The occasion conveyed a cultural message underscoring that resilience extends beyond the battlefield to encompass art, culture and national identity.

France top

He attributed the decrease stems to the enforcement of a new European regulation introduced in 2023, which eases travel for Kuwaiti nationals by granting five-year multiple-entry visas, provided their passports meet the required validity criteria.

He stressed that this is a significant measure, as it removes the need for Kuwaiti travelers to apply for visas in successive stages -- practice still required in some other countries. He said applicants are now able to receive a five-year visa in one step, on the condition that their passport remains valid for the full duration of the requested visa period plus an additional three months.

He also underscored the exceptionally low rejection rate for Kuwaiti applicants, which stands at no more than 0.2 percent. He pointed out this contrasts sharply with the anticipated overall rejection rate of about 2.6 percent for all nationalities in 2025, proving the strong level of confidence and reliability associated with Kuwaiti travelers.

He clarified that these statistics apply to short-term Schengen visas, which allow stays of up to 90 days within any 180-day timeframe.

In addition, he affirmed that France warmly welcomes Kuwaiti students who want to pursue higher education through long-stay visas. He stated that students must start their application process at the Campus France Office located within the French Institute in Jabriya before moving to the final visa application stage.

He revealed that the embassy processes an average of 150 visa applications per day, indicating the number increases to as many as 300 during the peak summer season.

He acknowledged that the surge in summer applications inevitably results in extended waiting periods, with appointment scheduling potentially reaching four weeks or more and processing times extending to nearly one month.

To ease seasonal congestion and provide applicants with a smoother experience, he strongly recommended submitting applications six months ahead of the intended travel date, in line with the standard allowable application timeframe.

He also affirmed improvements in the appointment scheduling system, particularly the introduction of online prepayment. “This measure aims to reduce missed appointments and no-shows, thereby, improving the management and reallocation of available appointment slots to other applicants,” he added.

With regard to visas for domestic workers accompanying their employers, he clarified that eligibility is based on the nationality worker rather than that of the employer. “This visa category requires additional documentation, including a comprehensive employment contract specifying the duration of service, salary and year of employment. Applicants must also submit proof of health insurance and confirm compliance with mandatory social security contributions in France,” he elaborated.

He emphasized that the authorized duration of stay for a domestic worker visa differs from that of the sponsor’s visa, and strict compliance with the approved period is required, as any overstay may negatively affect future visa applications.

He stressed the necessity of applying through the country that is the primary or initial destination within the Schengen Area. “If France is the principal or longest-stay destination, the application must be lodged with the French embassy. If another Schengen country is the primary destination, the application should be filed with that country’s embassy,” he expounded.

He warned that failure to adhere to this requirement may result in questioning or complications upon entry, as border authorities are entitled to verify that the visa was issued by the appropriate country corresponding to the travel itinerary.

On passport renewal, he said a visa remains valid in the old passport until its expiration date. “If a new passport is issued—whether due to filled pages or any other reason—the traveler must carry both the old and new passports, since the visa is linked to the number of the old passport,” he stated.

He also pointed out that two valid visas cannot be held at the same time, except in certain circumstances involving long-stay visas.

He reiterated that applications must be submitted only through the officially authorized center in coordination with the embassy. He cautioned applicants against relying on agencies or intermediaries who claim to accelerate procedures for additional fees, asserting that such claims do not influence processing times or visa decisions.

He urged applicants to ensure the accuracy of the information they provide and to assume full responsibility for their data, as inaccuracies may complicate the application file or lead to refusal.

Regarding visa issuance procedures, the ambassador emphasized that securing an appointment is mandatory, as walk-in submissions are not accepted. “Applicants are required to complete the online submission process before booking an appointment to visit the application center with all the necessary documents. Personal attendance is compulsory for biometric fingerprint collection. However, children under 12 years of age and individuals whose fingerprints have been recorded within the past 59 months are exempt from this requirement. The fingerprints of holders of five-year visas may expire before the visa itself expires, making re-registration necessary when submitting a new application,” he said..

Meanwhile, Haroun Yamani, Director of Operations at Capago, announced that during Ramadan, passport collection will be from 1:00 pm to 4:30 pm, seven days a week, with possible minor adjustments to the application submission timings.

PAM notifies staff of salary cuts via Sahel

Delays trigger company suspension

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Public Authority for Manpower (PAM) has started implementing a new mechanism to inform private sector employees of the reasons for and amounts of salary deductions through the Sahel app, reports Al-Rai daily.

According to informed sources, the new service is part of measures to ensure companies comply with depositing salaries into employees’ accounts and to monitor any delays or shortfalls in payments.

Immediate penalties apply to companies that fail to deposit employees’ salaries, including the suspension or temporary closure of the company’s file until the issue is resolved and the required deposits are made.

Any salary deduction is automatically detected by PAM’s automated system, which suspends the company’s file until the reasons for the deduction are identified and clarified. The affected employee is then notified via Sahel app with details of the deduction and the reasons behind it.

The sources said PAM continues to collaborate with Sahel application to send employee notifications regarding absences and other labor-related procedures connecting employees to their companies, which enhances transparency and protects employee rights.

N.Calif under winter storm watch: As people travel for the holiday weekend, much of Northern California is under a winter storm watch, with communities bracing for several feet of snow.

The National Weather Service warned people traveling to and from the Sierra Nevada and its popular ski resorts to expect "major travel impacts" and to use "extreme caution."

But there is still time for people to get to their destinations for Presidents Day weekend.

Dakari Anderson, a National Weather Service meteorologist in the Sacramento office, told The Associated Press that Saturday through Sunday morning is going to be the "best travel window" ahead of the incoming cold weather system.

While there was some snow earlier in the week, conditions remained quiet on Saturday, Anderson said. But things are expected to pick up Sunday afternoon - with communities that are situated at elevations of 3,000 to 4,000 feet (914 to 1,219 meters) expecting to be blanketed with between 1 and 2 feet (30 and 60 centimeters) of snow. The US National Transportation Safety Board said on X that it is investigating the crash of an Epic Aircraft E1000, a single-engine, six-seat turboprop light aircraft.

The aircraft crashed near Emerald Mountain at about 12:20 a.m. local time under unknown circumstances, local media reported.

The Routt County Sheriff Doug Sherar said the coroner was working to identify the victims and notify their next of kin. (Xinhua)

Surfers rescue 6 people: Surfers in Santa Cruz are being lauded as heroes after they swam toward a capsized boat and pulled six injured people onto their boards until emergency crews arrived.

Droves of surfers were catching large waves Feb. 6 at Steamer Lane, a famous point along California's Central Coast, when a small motor boat barreled by and collided with a wave, throwing two adults and four children into the water. Several of the passengers were not wearing life jackets, according to an incident report from the Santa Cruz Fire Department.

"I basically live at that beach - I'm there almost every day - and that's one of the craziest things I've seen," said Vince Tuzzi, who was filming the surfers when the boat capsized.

Tuzzi said he knew something was about to go terribly wrong when he saw the fast-moving boat out of the corner of his eye. Afterward he watched as about 10 surfers, two of them just 14 years old, got the people to safety. (AP)

'Unfair and illegal detentions'

Students in LA join protests against ICE

LOS ANGELES, Feb 15, (Xinhua): Thousands of high school students in Los Angeles walked out of class Friday and took to the streets, marching through downtown before gathering at City Hall for a rally condemning US Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) policies.

As they marched, students chanted "ICE out!" and denounced what they described as "unfair" and "illegal" detentions and deportations affecting friends and family members.

The walkouts were fueled by a growing number of reports, videos and personal accounts alleging excessive force, racial profiling and mistreatment by ICE officers. Many students shared their own stories, or those of relatives and peers, describing traumatic encounters with immigration enforcement in their communities and sometimes near school campuses.

The demonstrations also focused on ICE's presence at or near schools, an issue that has sparked concern in Southern California, home to a large immigrant population. Students argued that schools should remain safe spaces where all children, regardless of immigration status, feel protected.

geles public school system, told Xinhua she joined the protest to honor her parents, who migrated from Mexico before she was born.

"They left Mexico to be out of danger. Now it seems like there is more danger here in the United States because of ICE's violence against innocent immigrants," she said.

Tensions rose as protesters gathered outside the Metropolitan Detention Center, where ICE agents reportedly requested additional backup. Officers later moved to disperse the crowd.

Control of Congress at stake

In battleground Michigan, three Democrats test vision of affordability in Senate primary

SAGINAW, Mich., Feb 15, (AP): When Donald Trump fought his way back to the White House in 2024, he capitalized on simmering economic discontent in political battlegrounds such as Michigan. Now Democrats are trying to harness those same concerns, which have lingered as people across the country lose confidence in the Republican president's ability to ease the cost of living.

The only question is how to do it. That nationwide challenge is especially urgent in Michigan, where three Democrats are running in the US Senate primary in August.

The candidates - US Rep Haley Stevens, state Sen Mallory McMorrow and physician Abdul El-Sayed - are making different pitches to voters, and their success or failure will help determine the party's fortunes in the November midterm elections, when control of Congress is at stake.

The party's chances of winning back control of the Senate will become much harder without retaining the seat held by retiring Democratic Sen. Gary Peters.

The likely Republican nominee is Mike Rogers, a former congressman seeking a Senate seat for the second time. In 2024, he lost by 19,000 votes to Democrat Elissa Slotkin, who moved from the House to the Senate.

Wearing a welding helmet and gloves, Stevens moved in close toward flying sparks as a plumbing apprentice showed off his welding technique at a union training workshop in Saginaw.

Her suburban Detroit district is part of the automobile hub central to Michigan's economy and workforce. She is building off her relationships with organized labor and campaigning against Trump's tariff strategy, saying the president is hurting the state's manufacturing sector and driving up prices across the board.

"He's been more focused on cutting deals all over the world than cutting deals here in Michigan, and now we have job insecurity and in some cases job loss," Stevens said in an interview.

Stevens introduced herself to students at their work stations and asked questions about their projects, such as carefully connecting pipes with tightly fitted grooves as an alternative to welding.

At one station, three apprentices showed the congresswoman paper sketches of plumbing construction designs. She told them how important their careers will be as existing infrastructure ages. She promised that she will find the money to hire people to fix it.

"We like that," said one student.

After the tour, Stevens sat around a table with union leaders. Speaking over whirring machinery, she sympathized with the complexity of providing health care benefits.

ager at UA Local 85, said that the "far left" and the "far right" are failing to improve things in politics, a complaint that dovetailed with Stevens' efforts to pitch herself as a moderate.

"This is why I like walking a day in people's shoes," she said.

A crowd of Democrats recently packed into a dimly lit side room of Churchill's Food & Spirits in downtown Flint. "Jesse's Girl" played over the speakers as McMorrow's team shuffled chairs to squeeze in a few more people before she took to the microphone.

The lawmaker has hosted campaign stops at various breweries around the state. Her favorite beer is a blood orange honey ale from the Cheyebogan Brewing Co.

She got into politics after Trump's victory in 2016, and she was first elected in 2018. McMorrow is in the state Senate's Democratic leadership and has gained national recognition for a few viral moments in recent years, including bringing a Project 2025 prop to the party's national convention in 2024. She is running with a new motivation this time around for the sake of her 5-year-old daughter.

"Like any parent, I am thinking a lot about what tomorrow looks like," she said.

One of her goals is expanding a Michigan program that helps mothers with new children by giving them cash grants.

"When something's working, you expand on it," McMorrow said in an interview. "I think there's a huge opportunity where Michigan has done a lot of things right that we can ensure every American benefits from."

Karen Breasbois, a former farmer, asked McMorrow what she would do about Trump's tariffs that have hurt soybean operations. McMorrow promised to listen to rural communities, not act like a "missionary" like other Democrats from liberal urban areas.

"We need another Debbie Stabenow," Breasbois said in an interview, referencing Michigan's longtime agriculture champion in the US Senate who retired in early 2025. "Mallory, she's got that spunk."

El-Sayed, a physician and former county health official, delivered a diagnosis for the cost of living problem at a recent town hall: corporate greed.

About 100 people turned out at a community college in Detroit in late January on a brutally cold night. El-Sayed, who finished far behind the current governor, Gretchen Whitmer, in the 2018 Democratic primary for that office, led the crowd in a chant he uses to begin and end his rallies: "Money out of politics, money in your pocket, Medicare for all."

El-Sayed has long campaigned for Medicare for all, a slogan that champions universal health care. In recent weeks, he has started adding an asterisk, saying that people should be able to obtain additional coverage from their union or employer.

The discussion at the gathering often circled back to the high cost of health care, something he chalks up to corporate entities and their lobbying powers.

"In an era where union membership is near an all-time low and in an era where inequality is near an all-time high, we have to recognize that these two things are not a coincidence, they are one in the same problem," he said from a small stage where campaign staff and volunteers filmed from multiple angles for social media.

In an interview, El-Sayed said he has been talking about the cost of living for years, while other candidates, Democrats and Republicans alike, are just now getting on board with the affordability focus.

Natasha VanGessel, a medical assistant from Royal Oak who sat in one of the first rows at the town hall, has followed El-Sayed since he ran for governor in 2018 and regularly tunes into his podcast, called America Dissected.

"He's very well thought out, very intelligent," she said. "And really, I think, has some good ideas."

Trump's desire to obtain Greenland remains unchanged: Danish PM

MUNICH, Germany, Feb 15, (Xinhua): Danish Prime Minister Mette Frederiksen said on Saturday that US President Donald Trump's desire to obtain Greenland has not changed.

"I think the desire from the US president is exactly the same. He is very serious about this theme," Frederiksen said at a panel of the Munich Security Conference.

"We have to protect sovereign states. We have to protect people's right to self-determination. And the Greenlandic people have been very clear: they don't want to become Americans," she stressed.

According to media reports, a US-Denmark-Greenland working group has been established to address US "security concerns" in the Arctic.

"We now have a working group, it's good. We will try to see if we can find a solution ... But of course, there are red lines that will not be crossed. And we will stick to our strategy," Frederiksen said on another occasion on Friday.

in the Swiss Alpine town of Davos last month.

Meanwhile, Trump also announced his decision not to follow through on his threat to impose new tariffs on eight European countries over Greenland following a meeting with NATO Secretary General Mark Rutte.

Greenland, the world's largest island, is a self-governing territory within the Kingdom of Denmark, with Copenhagen retaining control over defense and foreign policies. Since returning to office in 2025, Trump has repeatedly expressed a desire to "obtain" Greenland, a move that has sparked backlash across Europe.

Ukrainian drone strike sparks fires at Russian Black Sea port ahead of talks

KYIV, Feb 15, (AP): A Ukrainian drone strike ignited fires at one of Russia's Black Sea ports, officials said Sunday, ahead of fresh talks aimed at ending the nearly 4-year-old war.

Two people were wounded in the attack on the port of Taman in the Krasnodar region, which damaged an oil storage tank, warehouse and terminals, according to regional Gov Veniamin Kondratyev.

Meanwhile, falling debris from Russian drones damaged civilian and transport infrastructure in Ukraine's Odesa region, officials said, causing disruption to the power and water supply.

Ukraine's long-range drone strikes on Russian energy sites aim to deprive Moscow of the oil export revenue it needs to pursue its full-scale invasion. Russia wants to cripple the Ukrainian power grid, seeking to deny civilians access to heat, light and running water in what Kyiv officials say is an attempt to "weaponize winter."

The attacks came ahead of another round of US-brokered talks between envoys from Russia and Ukraine on Tuesday and Wednesday in Geneva, just before the fourth anniversary of the all-out Russian invasion of its neighbor on Feb 22.

Speaking at the Munich Security Conference in Germany on Saturday, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy suggested there were still questions remaining over future security guarantees for his country. Zelenskyy also questioned how the concept of a free trade zone - proposed by the US - would work in the Donbas region, which Russia insists Kyiv must give up for peace.

He said the Americans want peace as quickly as possible and that the US team wants to sign all the agreements on Ukraine at the same time, whereas Ukraine wants guarantees for the country's future security signed first.

Europeans push back at US over claim they face 'civilizational erasure'

MUNICH, Feb 15, (AP): A top European Union official on Sunday rejected the notion that Europe faces "civilizational erasure," pushing back at criticism of the continent by the Trump administration.

EU foreign policy chief Kaja Kallas addressed the Munich Security Conference a day after US Secretary of State Marco Rubio offered a somewhat reassuring message to European allies. He struck a less aggressive tone than Vice President JD Vance did in lecturing them at the same gathering last year but maintained a firm tone on Washington's intent to reshape the trans-Atlantic alliance and push its policy priorities.

Kallas alluded to criticism in the US national security strategy released in December, which asserted that economic stagnation in Europe "is eclipsed by the real and more stark prospect of civilizational erasure."

It suggested that Europe is being enfeebled by its immigration policies, declining birth rates, "censorship of free speech and suppression of political opposition" and a "loss of national identities and self-confidence."

"Contrary to what some may say, woke, decadent Europe is not facing civilizational erasure," Kallas told the conference. "In fact, people still want to join our club and not just fellow Europeans," she added, saying she was told when visiting Canada last year that many people there have an interest in joining the EU.

Kallas rejected what she called "European-bashing."

"We are, you know, pushing humanity forward, trying to defend human rights and all this, which is actually bringing also prosperity for people. So that's why it's very hard for me to believe these accusations."

Despite the rapid intervention of rescue services, three victims have died, it said, adding that they were all equipped with avalanche transceivers. (Xinhua)

'EU and not Russia is Hungary's real threat'

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Feb 15, (AP): The real threat facing Hungary is not Russia but the European Union, Prime Minister Viktor Orbán said in a speech to supporters on Saturday, as his nationalist party ramps up an anti-EU campaign ahead of national elections.

With only eight weeks until the April 12 vote, Orbán and his Fidesz party are facing their most serious challenge since the right-wing populist leader retook power in 2010.

Most independent polls show Fidesz trailing the center-right Tisza party and its leader, Péter Magyar, even as Orbán has campaigned on the unsubstantiated premise that the EU would send Hungarians to their deaths in neighboring Ukraine if his party loses.

In his speech on Saturday, Orbán compared the EU to the repressive Soviet regime that dominated Hungary for over 40 years last century, and dismissed the belief of many European leaders that Russian President Vladimir Putin poses a threat to the continent's security.

‘China willing to strengthen exchanges at various levels with Austria’

Wang calls on Germany to become driving force for cooperation between China, Europe

MUNICH, Germany, Feb 15, (Xinhua): Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi on Saturday called on Germany to become a driving force for pragmatic cooperation between China and Europe and an anchor of stability for the strategic relationship between the two sides.

Wang, also a member of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party of China Central Committee, made the appeal when meeting here with German Chancellor Friedrich Merz.

Wang conveyed cordial greetings of the Chinese leadership to Merz, and said the Chancellor's speech Friday at the opening ceremony of the Munich Security Conference reflects Germany and Europe's aspiration for strategic autonomy as well as self-reliance and strength. China supports Germany in playing a greater role in this regard, he said.

All initiatives proposed and all actions taken by China on the international stage are meant to uphold the international system with the United Nations (UN) at its core, Wang said, noting that although the UN's authority and status have been weakened, its important status remains irreplaceable. The Global Governance Initiative proposed by Chinese President Xi Jinping is aimed at revitalizing the UN and building a more just and equitable global governance system, he said.

China and Germany should demonstrate the responsibility of major countries and make new contributions to world peace and development, Wang said.

Noting that China and Germany share extensive common interests and have strong complementary advantages, and strengthening cooperation is a strategic choice based on the practical needs of both countries, Wang said China's commitment to high-level opening-up will provide tremendous opportunities for German companies to invest and operate, hoping that Germany will also provide a more fair and equitable business environment for Chinese companies.

Wang said China stands ready to work with Germany to prepare for the next stage of high-level exchanges, strengthen pragmatic cooperation in new level.

For his part, Merz asked Wang to convey his sincere greetings to the Chinese leadership. Noting China's globally recognized remarkable achievements in development, Merz said that the country plays a pivotal role internationally.

Germany and China enjoy close economic and trade relations, and both are beneficiaries and supporters of economic globalization, he said, calling on the two sides to seize opportunities, tap potential and deepen cooperation. Germany consistently opposes protectionism, advocates free trade, and encourages German companies to increase investment and cooperation in China, Merz noted.

Germany adheres to the one-China policy and looks forward to close high-level exchanges with China, strengthening cooperation in various fields, and promoting greater development of Germany-China relations, he added.

China is willing to strengthen exchanges at various levels and enhance mutually beneficial cooperation with Austria, Wang Yi said on Friday.

Wang, also a member of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party of China Central Committee, made the remarks while meeting with Austrian Federal Minister for European and International Affairs Beate Meinel-Reisinger on the sidelines of the Munich Security Conference.

The world is changing rapidly and should be getting better, not worse, said Wang, noting that it is now the time for countries to strengthen solidarity and cooperation, to jointly safeguard the authority of the United Nations, and to practice genuine multilateralism.

Urging all countries to work together to build a community with a shared future for humanity, Wang also voiced China's support for Europe in pursuing a path of strategic autonomy and contributing to building a safer, more harmonious and fairer world. Austria, as a European country with unique advantages, is believed to make new contributions in this regard, he said.

Cambodia vows to eradicate online scams: Cambodia is committed to eliminating online scam networks by April 2026, as more than 7,000 online scam suspects have been deported so far, said a spokesperson on Friday.

The Southeast Asian country has launched an unprecedented nationwide crackdown on cyber scam networks to maintain social security, safety, and public order, and to restore the kingdom's image on the international stage.

The government "has set a deadline to completely eradicate online scam networks in Cambodia by April 2026," Ministry of Interior Spokesperson Touch Sokhak said in a press briefing.

He said that since 2025 to date, the kingdom has expelled 7,657 online scam suspects back to their birth countries.

Of them, more than 5,500 were deported throughout 2025, and over 2,000 were expelled in just over a month in 2026, he added. (Xinhua)

Japan stabbing kills 1, suspect flees: A 17-year-old boy was killed, and two other boys were injured after they were stabbed in central Osaka, western Japan, late Saturday, local media reported.

The police received an emergency call around 11:55 pm local time reporting that people had been stabbed on the first floor of a building located in Osaka's busy Dotombori shopping area, Kyodo News reported, citing the Osaka police.

A young man suspected of carrying out the stabbings in the downtown area with many eateries has fled on foot and remains at large, the report said.

The deceased victim from Nara Prefecture sustained stab wounds to the chest and other areas and was pronounced dead at the scene, while the two other 17-year-old boys were taken to hospital with injuries, according to police.

The attacker, believed to be in his twenties, knew the three victims, and they had a dispute shortly before the attack, police said. (Xinhua)

1 dead, 3 hospitalized in Sydney stabbings: One person has died and three others have been hospitalized following three separate stabbing incidents in western Sydney on Sunday.

Police in the state of New South Wales (NSW) said in a statement that emergency services were called to reports of a stabbing at a residence in Lethbridge Park, about 40 km west of central Sydney, shortly before 2 pm year-old man was treated by ambulance paramedics but died at the scene.

A second man, aged 25, was also treated for stab wounds and taken to the hospital in a stable condition.

It followed two separate stabbing attacks in western Sydney in the early hours of Sunday, Australia's 9News network reported.

A man aged in his 20s was taken to the hospital in a serious but stable condition after being found with multiple stab wounds in a vehicle in Hoxton Park, about 33 km west of central Sydney, shortly after midnight. (Xinhua)

At least 6,000 killed over 3 days during RSF attack on Sudan's el-Fasher: UN

CAIRO, Feb 15, (AP): More than 6,000 people were killed in over three days when a Sudanese paramilitary group unleashed "a wave of intense violence ... shocking in its scale and brutality" in Sudan's Darfur region in late October, according to the United Nations.

The Rapid Support Forces' offensive to capture the city of el-Fasher included widespread atrocities that amount to war crimes and possible crimes against humanity, the U.N. Human Rights Office said in a report released on Friday.

"The wanton violations that were perpetrated by the RSF and allied Arab militia in the final offensive on el-Fasher underscore that persistent impunity fuels continued cycles of violence," said U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Türk.

The RSF and their allied Arab militias, known as Janjaweed, overran el-Fasher, the Sudanese army's only remaining stronghold in Darfur, on Oct. 26 and rampaged through the city and its surroundings after more than 18 months of siege.

The 29-page U.N. report detailed a set of atrocities that ranged from mass killings and summary executions, sexual violence, abductions for ransom, torture and ill-treatment to detention and disappearances. In many cases, the attacks were ethnicity-motivated, it said.

The RSF did not respond to an e-mailed request for comment.

The paramilitaries' Gen. Mohammed Hamdan Dagalo has previously acknowledged abuses by his fighters, but disputed the scale of atrocities.

The alleged atrocities in el-Fasher, the provincial capital of North Darfur, mirror a pattern of RSF conduct in its war against the Sudanese military. The war began in April 2023 when a power struggle between the two sides exploded into open fighting in the capital, Khartoum and elsewhere across the country.

The conflict created the world's largest humanitarian crisis with parts of the country pushed into famine. It has also been marked by heinous atrocities which the International Criminal Court said it was investigating as war crimes and crimes against humanity. The RSF was also accused by the Biden administration of carrying out genocide in the ongoing war.

‘Bring back the king’

Thousands rally in Nepal

KATHMANDU, Nepal, Feb 15, (AP): Thousands of supporters of Nepal's former king gathered outside Kathmandu airport Friday to greet him and demand the restoration of abolished monarchy in the Himalayan nation.

Gyanendra Shah waved to the cheering crowd from the sunroof of his car as hundreds of police officers in riot gear struggled to control the supporters crowding the main entrance at Tribhuvan International Airport.

"Bring back the king. We love our king more than our own selves. Restore constitutional monarchy," the crowd chanted.

More supporters lined the route from the airport to the former king's private residence. The crowds were peaceful and no arrests were made.

The former king was returning from a trip to eastern Nepal.

Massive street protests in 2006 forced Gyanendra to give up his authoritarian rule, and two years later the parliament voted to abolish the monarchy as Gyanendra left the Royal Palace to live the life of a commoner.

An estimated 10,000 supporters turned out for a similar rally last year at the airport. Another pro-royal rally last year had turned violent leaving two dead and many injured.

Gyanendra has not commented on the calls for the return of monarchy. Despite growing support for the former king, Gyanendra has slim chances of immediately returning to power as the support is not as significant as that for other political parties opposing the idea.

The show of support for the monarchy comes ahead of crucial parliament elections next month. Pro-Gyanendra groups, which won about 5% of seats in the last election, are hoping to win seats.

Venezuelan prisoners families stage hunger strike demanding liberation of dissidents

CARACAS, Venezuela, Feb 15, (AP): Relatives of Venezuelan prisoners went on hunger strike on Saturday to demand the freedom of their loved ones as politicians in the South American nation debate an amnesty law for dissidents imprisoned under President Nicolas Maduro's rule.

In a message posted on Instagram, the Committee for the Freedom of Political Prisoners said the hunger strike is being staged by 10 people and would last until the government frees all 33 political prisoners still being held at a prison known as Zona 7, according to the civil society group's estimates.

Earlier on Saturday 17 prisoners were released from the Zona 7 detention center in Caracas and held tearful reunions with their families.

Relatives of dissidents being held at the facility have been sleeping outside since Jan 8, when Venezuelan officials had announced there would be significant prisoner releases aimed at promoting national reconciliation following a US raid on the country in which Maduro was captured with his wife.

But while hundreds of dissidents have been released from other prisons in Venezuela in recent weeks, liberations at Zona 7 have been scarce.

"We demand that National Assembly president Jorge Rodriguez keep his word and release all of the political prisoners," said Yessy Orozco, the daughter of a former legislator who was arrested in November.

Venezuela's authoritarian government has been under pressure from Washington to make political reforms even as the Trump administration eases sanctions on the nation's oil industry and officials from both nations meet to discuss ways to jump start oil production.

The National Assembly, which is still controlled by the ruling party, on Thursday debated a measure that could free hundreds of opposition members,

Lawmakers vote on an amnesty bill at the National Assembly in Caracas, Venezuela on Feb 12. (AP) activists and human rights defenders who have been detained for months or years for political reasons.

The debate in itself was a stark turn for Venezuela, where authorities have for decades denied the country has any political prisoners.

Although lawmakers approved portions of the measure, they ultimately voted to suspend the session to resolve some sticking points, including whether people who left the country to avoid detention can be granted amnesty.

The debate is expected to resume next week.

Venezuela's exiled opposition leader, Maria Corina Machado, said on Saturday that she will continue to push for new elections to be held in the country as part of a transition to democracy.

She was speaking via video conference to a group of policy analysts who had attended the Munich Security Conference, an annual event that is attended by world leaders.

"A transition to democracy will be orderly, it will be peaceful, and as soon as it takes place it will be better not only for Venezuelans but also for the region and the United States," said Machado, who was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in December.

She did not provide a date for when elections should be held, arguing that depended on "political conditions." Trump administration officials, including Secretary of State Marco Rubio, have also expressed their desire for new elections in Venezuela, but have so far refrained from laying out a time frame.

Machado rejected suggestions made by some analysts that chaos would break out in Venezuela if the current government is replaced.

"We have a civil society that is cohesive, united, with no religious, racial or regional factions," she said. "And we have the support of the majority of the armed forces."

Venezuela's acting President Delcy Rodriguez proposed the bill.

The bill's latest draft defines its purpose as "granting a general and full amnesty for crimes or offenses committed" during specific periods since 1999 that were marked by politically-driven conflicts in Venezuela, including the "acts of politically motivated violence" in the context of the 2024 presidential election.

Ruling party loyalists declared Maduro the winner of that election despite ample credible evidence to the contrary. That led to protests and the arrest of more than 2,000 people.

General amnesty has long been a central demand of Venezuela's opposition and human rights organizations, but they have viewed the proposal with cautious optimism and raised several concerns about how it will be implemented and who will be eligible for release.

Venezuela-based prisoners' rights group Foro Penal estimates more than 600 people are in custody for political reasons.

Supported by strong fundamentals across the region

Markaz sees continued momentum in GCC real estate positive outlook for H1

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Kuwait Financial Centre “Markaz” has released its latest Real Estate Outlook: H1 2026” report, offering a comprehensive analysis of real estate market performance across the key real estate sectors in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates (UAE).

The report provides an in-depth review of sector activity during H2 2025 and outlines expectations for the first half of 2026. It highlights that real estate markets across the region demonstrated upward momentum in H2 2025, supported by steady economic growth, easing monetary conditions, and a more accommodative interest rate environment. Building on this trend, Markaz expects the GCC real estate market to remain in an accelerating phase in H1 2026.

Furthermore, higher oil production, growth in the non-oil economy, continued government spending on infrastructure and development projects, along with policy rate cuts, are expected to improve liquidity and credit growth. These factors support borrowing and investment activity across residential, commercial, and industrial real estate segments.

Kuwait: Stability with Selective Upside

Kuwait’s real estate sector maintained a stable growth trajectory through the first nine months of 2025, supported by rising land prices and rental rates across Istithmari (investment) and commercial segments. Land prices increased on an annual basis across governorates, while rental rates in the investment segment recorded steady gains.

Real estate transaction activity strengthened in three quarters of 2025, with total real estate sales rising by 26.9% year-on-year to KD 3,043 million, driven by growth across all segments. Investment segment sales increased by 60.0% year-on-year, while residential and commercial segment sales rose by 8.0% and 17.4% respectively. Transaction volumes grew by 27.8% year-on-year to 4,247, supported by increased activity across residential, investment, and commercial properties.

Looking ahead, Kuwait’s real GDP is projected to grow by 3.9% year-on-year in 2026, driven by higher oil production, improved non-oil activity, stronger project awards, and anticipated interest rate reductions. These factors are expected to support demand for commercial and industrial real estate.

Based on macroeconomic indicators and a Markaz Real Estate Macro Index score of 3.45 out of 5.0, Markaz expects Kuwait’s real estate market to remain stable in H1 2026, with prospects for increases in land prices and rental rates.

Saudi Arabia: Acceleration Continues

Saudi Arabia’s real estate sector remained in an accelerating phase in H2 2025, driven by strong residential activity and tight office market conditions. Residential transactions increased by 17.9% quarter-on-quarter in Q3 2025, with Riyadh and Jeddah leading price gains, while developers continued to accelerate supply through gigaprojects and premium residential developments.

The office segment remained highly constrained, with vacancy in Riyadh at near-zero levels (0.5%), supporting prime rent growth of 7.3% year-on-year. Demand was underpinned by the Regional Headquarters Program and expanding activity in healthcare and technology sectors. While the fiscal deficit widened to 3.7% of GDP in 2025 and is expected to remain at similar levels in 2026, increased capital expenditure under Vision 2030 is anticipated to support construction activity, sustaining demand across commercial and residential segments. Population growth continues to underpin housing demand, with Saudi Arabia’s population reaching 35.3 million by mid-2024, up 4.7% year-on-year, with non-Saudis accounting for 44.4% of the total. Based on these trends, Markaz believes Saudi Arabia’s real estate market remains in the accelerating phase and is expected to sustain momentum in H1 2026, signaling stable market conditions with room for further gains for investors.

UAE: Strong Performance with Signs of Peaking

The UAE real estate market recorded strong performance during the first three quarters of 2025. In Dubai, real estate transaction values increased by 28.3% year-on-year to AED 554.1 billion, while Abu Dhabi recorded total real estate sales of AED 58 billion, reflecting a 75.8% year-on-year increase. The number of transactions in Abu Dhabi also rose by 42.3% year-on-year to 15,800.

The UAE continues to offer attractive rental yields compared to global peers. As of June 2025, rental yields in Dubai stood at 7.47%, marginally lower than the previous month but well above yields in major global markets such as Singapore (3%), New York (5.8%), and London (3.3%).

Although Dubai’s annual sales values have consistently outperformed the previous year over the past three years, concerns regarding sustainability have emerged. Markaz notes that the current growth cycle is supported by strong fundamentals, reducing the likelihood of a sharp correction. However, a period of moderation or cooling is expected over the medium term. Nonetheless, Markaz forecasts that the UAE real estate market could peak in H1 2026, marked by steady growth in prices and rental rates in both Dubai and Abu Dhabi.

Despite evolving macroeconomic dynamics, GCC real estate markets are expected to sustain momentum in H1 2026. Markaz believes real estate will remain a key contributor to the region’s economic development, offering attractive opportunities for investors across residential, commercial, and industrial segments.

- The DEI Council serves a compass guiding the Bank in recruitment, development, and recognition policies to ensure equal opportunities.
- The Council is comprised of 11 members from NBK Group’s officials across its various markets in which it operates.
- This reflects NBK’s leading role in adopting the best human resources practices regionally and globally.
- The DEI Council should empower employees to express their opinions and actively participate in developing the work environment.

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: In line with its commitment to adopting the best governance practices and establishing a diverse work environment, National Bank of Kuwait launched the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Council, with the aim of setting a sustainable institutional framework to incorporate these values into all human resources practices, ensuring equal opportunities under a fair work environment that transforms diversity into a source of strength and creativity.

This step reflects NBK’s continued commitment to building a more balanced and inclusive work environment for all its employees across the different departments and job levels within the Bank. Moreover, creating this Council is a step that is clearly consistent with NBK’s direction towards promoting a corporate culture that embraces diverse perspectives, backgrounds, and experiences, strengthens the organization, drives innovation, and allows the Bank, together with its international branches and subsidiaries, to better serve the community and all its stakeholders.

In December 2024, NBK launched its official DEI Commitment Statement announcing its commitment to the principles of diversity, equity, and inclusion and affirming that it holds these values as fundamental pillars on which its corporate culture stands. The commitment statement embodies the Bank’s dedication to establishing a work environment based on justice and equal opportunities, rejecting all forms of discrimination, and aligning its policies with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (UN SDGs), specifically SDG 5: Gender Equality and SDG 10: Reduced Inequalities. These SDGs focus on promoting gender equality, reducing inequalities, and supporting decent work and economic growth, as well as incorporating these principles into the practices of Talent Management to ensure a productive, fair, and sustainable work environment that supports the Bank’s long-term vision for institutional development.

Moreover, the DEI Council is a part of NBK’s leading journey in adopting the best human resources practices at the regional and global level, and an important shift in promoting the active participation of employees, ensuring fair opportunities, and developing policies and initiatives that support the inclusion of all groups within the work environment.

The Council held its first meeting on January 27, 2026, where it began working on developing clear measurement mechanisms and accurate performance indicators to monitor and disclose progress in diversity, equity, and inclusion initiatives, thereby enhancing transparency and highlighting the Bank’s commitment to achieving tangible results in this area.

The Council is comprised of 11 members from NBK Group’s officials across its various markets in which it operates, including Kuwait, Singapore, Bahrain, KSA and London, reflecting the inclusiveness of representation and the diversity of expertise within the group.

Additionally, this Council will enable employees to express their opinions and actively participate in developing the work environment, and it will also focus on supporting women in leadership, empowering national talent, creating safe spaces for dialogue and the exchange of ideas, and adopting initiatives that promote openness and diversity in the workplace.

The council will also come up with new policies and advanced training programs, as well as launching awareness and cultural initiatives aimed at raising awareness of diversity and inclusion. Moreover, it will support work teams in building an environment based on respect for difference and stimulating creativity. In this way, the Council will enhance the role of employees in shaping the future of the Bank’s internal culture, through specialized working committees that include representatives from various departments.

On this occasion, Najla Al-Sager, Head of Talent Management and Learning at NBK, commented: “The establishment of the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Council comes within the framework of our strategy aimed at promoting a work environment based on justice and equal opportunities, to serve as a compass that guides our policies and decisions related to employment, development and recognition”.

Al-Sager emphasized that NBK made significant progress in diversity and inclusion over the past years, whether in empowering women, supporting national talents, or developing training programs aimed at promoting a culture of inclusive leadership, highlighting some of the indicators recorded by the Bank during 2025, where the percentage of women in the total workforce reached 42.5%, while women in leadership roles reached 27.4%, and new recruitments of women reached 34.5% of the total workforce.

Finally, she added: “In recent years, we introduced many innovative initiatives to promote diversity and inclusion, most notably the NBK Rise program, which is the first initiative of its kind in Kuwait, specifically designed to support and empower women leaders to reach the highest leadership positions, which has won many regional and international awards”.

It is worth noting that NBK is strongly committed to empowering women across the entire Group and increasing their presence in leadership positions by providing appropriate guidance and opportunities for career development. The Bank also collaborates with leading universities and training centers around the world to provide specialized programs and workshops aimed at developing female leaders and equipping them with tools and techniques that help them in the field of leadership.

Company honored winners of the 3rd Kuwait National Robotics Championship

Zain Kuwait’s investment in youth is shaping tomorrow’s digital & knowledge economy

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Through a third consecutive strategic partnership with the Kuwait National Robotics Championship (KNRC), Zain Kuwait reaffirms its ongoing commitment to supporting high-impact initiatives that develop young people’s digital skills and empower them to lead the future with confidence. This is achieved by providing practical, applied learning platforms that help prepare national talent to keep pace with the requirements of the digital and knowledge economy.

Zain took part in the closing ceremony hosted at the Conference Center at Sabah Al-Salem University City, attended by H.E. Minister of State for Youth and Sports Affairs Dr. Tareq Al-Jalahma, President of Kuwait University Dr. Dina Al-Mailam, Acting Director General of the Public Authority for Youth, Nasser Al-Sheikh, and Chief Corporate Affairs and Relations Officer at Zain Kuwait Waleed Al-Khashti. Al-Khashti joined the ceremony to honor the winners and announced the recipient of Zain’s Innovation Nation Award, recognizing the team whose project best integrated innovation with sustainability.

KNRC was jointly organized by Kuwait University, the Public Authority for Youth, and the Ministry of Education, in strategic partnership with Zain Kuwait, reflecting an integrated model that brings together the education sector, the youth sector, and the private sector in service of Kuwait’s future.

During the closing ceremony, Waleed Al-Khashti said: “We remain committed to investing in young people and developing national talent ready to lead the digital and knowledge economy. By empowering a generation confident in its technical capabilities, Zain is advancing sustainable development through innovation and digital solutions.”

Dr. Tareq Al-Jalahma honors Waleed Al-Khashti, joined by Dr. Dina Al-Mailam and Nasser Al-Sheikh.

He added: “KNRC is among the most prominent national platforms combining applied learning, experimentation, and teamwork. It has contributed to developing analytical thinking, problem-solving, programming, and engineering prototyping skills, which we see as essential foundations for building national talent that can lead the future with confidence. For this reason, we present the annual ‘Innovation Nation’ Award, offered by Zain each year to the team that best integrates innovation and sustainability into science and technology applications.”

Al-Khashti concluded: “Our strategic partnership with the championship continues to stand out in its third year. Through close collaboration with various national institutions, we have shared the technology passion of more than 700 students across different educational stages. This represents a successful model of cross-sector integration in service of Kuwait’s future and aligns with Zain’s direction of investing in human capital and supporting applied learning pathways.”

KNRC is one of Kuwait’s largest national platforms encouraging school and university students to innovate in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM). It runs through a series of progressive stages throughout the season, combining hands-on learning, technological experimentation, and teamwork, thereby developing participants’ capabilities in analytical thinking, problem-solving, engineering prototyping, and programming.

The current season also featured a range of accompanying events and activities, including specialized competitions, training tracks, workshops, and scientific camps aimed at increasing students’ readiness for regional and global competitions. This included the hosting of competitive qualifiers at the Scientific Center recently, with broad participation from teams across different age groups.

This ongoing partnership aligns with Zain’s approach to investing in human capital and supporting applied learning pathways, helping build a generation that is confident in its technical abilities and able to contribute to achieving the goals of Kuwait Vision 2035 through innovation and the development of digital solutions that serve society and enhance its competitiveness.

Explainer: Who really pays Trump’s tariffs?

WASHINGTON, Feb 15, (Xinhua): When U.S. President Donald Trump unveiled his sweeping tariff package in 2025, he framed it as a cost to be borne by foreign exporters and governments.

Ten months later, the tariffs remain in force. By September 2025, the trade-weighted statutory rate had climbed to roughly 27 percent -- the highest level in nearly a century -- though the effective rate paid by importers was closer to 14 percent, according to a working paper by the U.S. National Bureau of Economic Research.

The central question is no longer what was promised, but who ultimately pays.

Legal liability for tariffs

Under U.S. law, tariffs are collected at the border by U.S. Customs and Border Protection. Legal liability rests with the importer of record -- typically a U.S.-based company bringing goods into the country. Foreign governments are not required to remit duties directly to Washington.

Legal responsibility, however, does not determine who bears the economic burden. Economists describe this as “tariff incidence” -- how the cost of a tariff is divided between foreign exporters and domestic importers. If exporters lower their prices to offset the duty, they absorb part of the burden; if export prices remain largely unchanged, the burden falls on the U.S. importers.

A study by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York found that nearly 90 percent of the tariffs’ economic impact fell domestically. During the first eight months of 2025, the share reached 94 percent, before easing to 86 percent in November.

In an article published in the Chicago Booth Review, researchers analyzing U.S. official data estimated that 94 percent of the tariffs were passed along to U.S. importers in 2025. In the 10 sectors facing the largest tariff increases, pass-through rates reached as high as 114 percent.

Other independent analyses drew similar conclusions. The U.S. Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimated that foreign exporters would absorb only about 5 percent of the cost, and Germany’s Kiel Institute for the World Economy (IfW) in January calculated a tariff pass-through rate of 96 percent.

“In terms of who’s paying for more of it, it’s disproportionately, almost entirely so far, on the U.S. side,” said Brent Neiman, a professor at the University of Chicago.

From importers to consumers

As the burden has largely remained within the United States, the next question is how it has been distributed domestically.

According to the CBO, in the near term, “U.S. businesses will absorb 30 percent of the import price increases by reducing their profit margins; the remaining 70 percent will be passed through to consumers by raising prices.”

Corporate disclosures provide additional insights. An analysis by the Institute on Taxation and Economic Policy noted that companies across several industries in the United States have told investors they intend to pass tariff-related costs on to consumers through higher prices.

During a recent earnings call, agricultural equipment manufacturer John Deere said its tariff-related expenses are expected to double from 600 million U.S. dollars in 2025 to 1.2 billion dollars in 2026. Executives told investors they plan to adjust prices accordingly.

Similarly, ITT Inc., a manufacturer of transportation and industrial components, told investors at a December conference that price increases were implemented in response to tariffs, adding that “the customer is taking care of tariffs.”

Newell Brands, a consumer products manufacturer, said in a December presentation that it increased prices “early and pretty aggressively” in response to tariff pressures.

According to the Budget Lab at Yale (TBL), the combined effect of the 2025 tariffs would raise overall prices by about 1.3 percent in the near term, translating into an average household income loss of roughly 1,800 dollars.

The burden is not evenly distributed: goods such as metals, leather and apparel could see much sharper adjustments, with initial price spikes of 28 to 40 percent before moderating to increases of 10 to 14 percent over time.

For U.S. consumers, the impact of higher import costs is felt most directly in everyday purchases.

Grocery prices have remained elevated even after the Trump administration exempted certain food and agricultural imports from its reciprocal tariff program in November. Beef is up 15 percent from a year earlier, while coffee costs have risen 18 percent, according to Axios.

Amid persistent price pressures, the Conference Board reported that U.S. consumer confidence fell in January to its lowest level in nearly 12 years.

The Wall Street Journal described the current environment as “a triple whammy” -- inflation, labor-market concerns and tariffs, noting that some interviewees doubted that the new tariffs would achieve much beyond raising prices.

“Everything is going up in price very quickly,” Jeremy Tolbert, a 47-year-old web developer in Lawrence, Kansas, told CBS News.

Government gains from family losses

When U.S. families face higher costs due to tariffs, the U.S. government gains more revenue.

According to the Financial Times, the tariffs have brought in 124 billion dollars for the federal government so far this fiscal year, more than triple the same period a year earlier. If Trump’s 2025 tariffs remained in place, the TBL estimated that they would raise more than 2.5 trillion dollars over the next 10 years.

However, rather than transferring wealth from foreign countries to the United States, tariffs function much like a consumption tax -- shifting money from U.S. consumers to the U.S. Treasury, the IfW concluded. The TBL further highlighted the regressive nature of the tariffs, finding that the lowest income decile faces more than three times the short-run burden of the highest decile.

As for the economy, the CBO reported that inflation will be higher over the next three years than previously expected because of tariffs, and that tariffs will “continue to weigh on growth by raising the cost of imported goods, reducing investment from abroad, and lowering the efficiency of the U.S. economy.”

U.S. supply chains will bear the costs as well. Companies relying on imported inputs face higher costs. The IfW warned that they must either absorb these costs by reducing profits and investment, pass them to customers by raising prices for downstream buyers, or scramble to find alternative sources, potentially incurring adjustment costs and delays.

“The tariffs are, in the most literal sense, an own goal. Americans are footing the bill,” said the IfW.

Strategic trust key to investment surge: Kathuria

India positions itself as Kuwait’s next big bet

By Chaitali B. Roy
Special to the Arab Times

As global trade fractures, supply chains realign, and geopolitical tensions redraw economic partnerships, India is positioning itself not merely as a survivor but as an alternative growth engine for the world. It was against this backdrop that Dr. Rajat Kathuria, Senior Visiting Professor at ICRIER, former Director and Chief Executive of the institution, and Dean of the School of Social Sciences and Humanities at Shiv Nadar University visited Kuwait to deliver a keynote lecture as part of the ‘Viksit Bharat 2047: India-Kuwait Dialogues’, organised by the Indian Embassy in collaboration with the Indian Business & Professional Council (IBPC).

The theme of his lecture focused on India’s resilience amid global disruptions, emerging trade realignments, and investment opportunities in one of the world’s fastest-growing major economies. Addressing policymakers, business leaders and members of the Indian diaspora, Dr. Kathuria examined how India has sustained 7–8% growth despite global slowdown, tariff wars and geopolitical uncertainty. With over 20 years in academia and 25 years in economic policy alongside assignments with the World Bank, ILO, UNCTAD and ADB, Dr Kathuria brought a blend of policy insight and global perspective to the discussion.

In an exclusive interview with Arab Times, he spoke about India’s services-driven growth model, the strategic advantage of its 1.4 billion-strong domestic market, the acceleration of trade partnerships with Europe and beyond, and the structural reforms needed to make India a competitive manufacturing hub. He also outlined concrete opportunities for Kuwaiti investors in infrastructure, capital markets, manufacturing and emerging sectors while cautioning against inward-looking economic policies. His message to Kuwait was direct and strategic: this is a moment of global realignment, and India offers not just growth, but partnership.

Arab Times: India has been growing at approximately 7.8%, according to Prime Minister Modi’s statement in the first quarter of this year. Many major economies are growing more slowly than India is. Why has India grown faster than most countries during a global economic slowdown?

Dr. Kathuria: I think one must look at this in at least two ways. First, we are not only one of the largest economies in the world but will soon become the third largest. Our population is also very large. If you multiply our per capita income of roughly $2,500–$2,700 by 1.4 billion people, you get a very large number. Our economy is large relative to that of the rest of the world, but our per capita income remains relatively low. We are large, which is good, but this is only the start of a process. Our size must be seen in context. Therefore, growth of 7–7.5% or even 8% is essentially about meeting our needs and aspirations.

One explanation is the logic of arithmetic. We are still a relatively poor country, and emerging markets tend to grow rapidly. So that partly explains our growth. Secondly, we are growing rapidly because we have a very large domestic market — 1.4 billion people. Approximately 50% of our growth is attributable to consumption. Some comes from investment, but consumption plays a major role. On the demand side, we have consumption, investment, and exports. On the production side, our services sector has been very robust. Services account for approximately 60% of our GDP. If that 60% grows at 9%, then 9 × 0.6 gives you 5.4%. So, 5.4% out of a 7–8% GDP growth rate is already contributed by services. That is what drives India’s growth. However, we need to do better if we want to become a truly large economy. The two reasons are: the arithmetic of being a large yet poor country, and the strong growth of the services sector.

AT: Your topic was global disruptions and challenges, and how India is managing to hold its own. If we speak of the war in Ukraine, rising prices have affected the world. How has India managed rising prices while maintaining economic growth?

Dr. Kathuria: One important point today is that the difference between nominal GDP and real GDP is historically low. The difference between nominal and real GDP essentially reflects inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator. It is growing at only about 0.5%, indicating very low inflation. We are at historically low inflation rates for several reasons. One reason is that industrial manufacturing no longer has strong pricing power. Oil prices, despite domestic taxes, are relatively low globally. We have been importing oil at historically low global prices, around $30–$40 per barrel at certain times. Prices remain high domestically due to taxes. But the import price of oil has not been increasing. The stability of oil prices is helping to keep inflation under control. If oil prices rise to $60 and we do not reduce taxes, inflation will rise.

Another factor is agricultural output. We had a strong agricultural year, and expectations are that output will remain strong. When agricultural output is strong, food prices remain stable, and expectations of price rises are lower. Low inflation is both good and concerning. It is good because food prices are under control and oil prices are stable. But low inflation can also reflect weak pricing power in the industry. Right now, although the economy is growing, industries lack strong pricing power.

One complicating factor is China’s huge excess capacity. Many countries are adopting a “China + 1” strategy, leading to excess capacity in China. Even if that excess capacity is not directly dumped into India, the expectation that it could affect pricing decisions in India.

Dr. Rajat Kathuria delivers a keynote lecture as part of the ‘Viksit Bharat 2047: India–Kuwait Dialogues’.

AT: India is currently the fastest-growing large economy in the world. Does this make India a natural competitor to China?

Dr. Kathuria: Yes. India offers today what China offered 15–20 years ago — a large domestic market that absorbs imports and exports to the world. Investment opportunities exist in labour-intensive sectors such as textiles, sports goods, and medical equipment, as well as sunrise sectors like cloud services, data services, mobile manufacturing, electronics components, and even semiconductor manufacturing. Traditional sectors such as chemicals also offer opportunities.

You can think of India as having two parts: Bharat and India. Bharat represents rural India, encompassing agriculture, food processing, fisheries, and the primary sector. India is a globally competitive economy that produces CEOs of global companies and competes in technology, FMCG, film, and other sectors.

AT: Regarding Kuwaiti investment in India, the government has increased spending on roads, railways, airports, and other infrastructure, sustaining strong growth even during difficult times. Do you see foreign companies or countries with economic strength, such as Kuwait, finding opportunities in India’s infrastructure sector?

Dr Kathuria: I think the interest from Kuwait has to go beyond the traditional areas of oil and the diaspora. Those are important, but it has to expand further. In my less than two days here, I have observed that Kuwait has an appetite for investment but lacks adequate conduits. The kind of handholding and trust between India and Kuwait has not been deeply entrenched. To answer your question, yes, there are opportunities.

From what I understand, some Kuwaiti funds invest in India indirectly via U.S.-based funds. They do not directly invest in India. However, there are many opportunities for them to invest directly in India, even if they do not want to build manufacturing units like Samsung or other large corporations, as the Japanese did with Suzuki or as Nokia did. If they do not want to establish physical factories, they can invest in the stock market. There are infrastructure bonds and investment trusts that offer attractive returns. However, direct exposure to India still seems limited. Look at CDPQ, the Canadian pension fund, or Macquarie, the Australian pension fund. They are investing directly in India and have been receiving good returns. If a Canadian pension fund, subject to its investors’ regulatory requirements, can invest in India, what is preventing Kuwait from doing so?

AT: India and Kuwait have a longstanding relationship, but the two countries need to strengthen economic trust to accelerate investment.

Dr Kathuria: Yes, we have not built that level of trust. I have not personally experienced it, but it is a rational and justifiable argument. What has been the dominant image of Indians in Kuwait? Primarily blue-collar workers. That shapes perceptions. It is similar to what used to happen in America. When I was there, Indians were often associated with petrol pumps or low-skilled jobs. Now it has changed 360 degrees. I believe part of the hesitation is stereotyping and perception. There needs to be greater direct engagement and better understanding between the two countries.

AT: This recent trade deal with the USA — things are a little grey, aren’t they? The recent issues with tariffs - Has it cast a shadow on India-US image as great friends?

Dr Kathuria: I think there has been a lot of positive fallout from the back-and-forth between Mr

Trump and Mr Modi, and between the US and India. All things considered, I think Trump has actually done a big service for India.

AT: In what way?

Dr Kathuria: The good thing for India is that he made Europe think differently. Europe began to view India as a form of insurance. Earlier, Europe’s focus was always on standards. If you met their standards, then they would consider reducing duties. The real issue was standards. But the fact that India and Europe have now signed the agreement was a fallout of what happened between Trump, Europe, and India. We would have signed it eventually, but his actions accelerated the process.

That is the positive outcome. The second positive was that he effectively brought India and Europe together to negotiate more urgently. Imagine — what had dragged on for years suddenly moved forward within weeks. I think he has done India a great service by pushing India to sign these deals. Left to itself, India might not have signed them so quickly. That is what I mean when I say he has done a service.

AT: What have been the other fall outs?

Dr. Kathuria: In some ways, external pressures have encouraged India to sign trade agreements more quickly. Lower tariffs will enhance India’s competitiveness. Historically, whenever Indian industry has faced competition, it has adapted and improved. India has signed agreements with Australia, is negotiating with Canada, and continues to engage with ASEAN countries, Japan, and others. While the WTO has weakened, India is pursuing bilateral and regional agreements to secure market access. Our current challenge is competitiveness — improving logistics, reducing bureaucratic hurdles, enhancing port and customs efficiency, and reducing corruption. The global environment actually favours India because many countries want an alternative to China. India is in a “sweet spot” where the world wants it to succeed.

AT: India aims to become a developed country by 2047, but challenges remain — unemployment, limited manufacturing jobs, low public spending on health and education, and rising inequality. What concrete steps are being taken?

Dr. Kathuria: Growth is essential. Without growth, the government will lack the resources for welfare programs and infrastructure. Growth enables public spending. The government is investing heavily in infrastructure to crowd in private investment. Better roads, ports, and connectivity reduce production costs and attract private investment. The budget includes plans for SME clusters in leather, textiles, sports goods, and medical devices. Welfare schemes such as MGNREGA and food distribution programs support millions. However, the fact that 800 million people receive food rations indicates that productive jobs are still insufficient. We should not glorify the “delivery economy.” It should be temporary, not a permanent solution. The focus must be on creating productive employment.

AT: Given the increasing use of economic sanctions and tariffs as political tools, should India focus more on self-reliance?

Dr. Kathuria: Self-sufficiency is a discredited doctrine for India. We tried that approach in the past. To become a developed country and raise per capita income to $8,000–$9,000, India must engage with the world. External engagement brings investment, technology, skills, and competition. We cannot produce everything ourselves. However, we must calibrate our engagement and prepare for risks. The recent India–EU engagement reflects a commitment to a rules-based order. India should insure itself against uncertainty but not turn inward. No country can develop in isolation.

The contest affirms KFH's social role and its keenness to promote Islamic values within the community, in addition to encouraging individual to recite and memorize the Holy Quran.

Executive Manager Social Media and PR Services Center at KFH, Abdullah Al-Saif, said that the contest encourages the discovery of talents in Tajweed, recitation, and memorization of the Holy Quran. "It motivates the current generation to read and memorize the Holy Quran, while also clarifying some of the rules of Tajweed." He also noted that the contest will be broadcast on KFH's social media channels with extensive media coverage from various outlets.

He added: "Having been launched 14 years ago, the contest is the oldest and the largest of its kind in Kuwait in terms of prizes value, with over 10,000 participants so far. It is part of KFH's integrated Ramadan program, demonstrating the Bank's commitment to its social responsibilities and aligning with the core values of Ramadan, a time for Quranic reflection and recitation."

Al-Saif further noted that registration for the contest will be available through several modern digital channels to facilitate participation and accommodate the recurring high annual demand. Participants will be categorized into age groups, and according to recitation and memorization sections.

He pointed out that the contest has earned growing trust among Quran reciters year after year, supported by appreciation for KFH as the first bank to initiate such initiative, in addition to the presence of several valuable elements that enhance competitiveness and motivate participants. These include a distinguished judging panel of esteemed scholars, as well as well-structured organization tailored to the varying abilities, age groups, and recitation levels.

Al-Saif revealed that the contest is organized separately for male and female participants. "It includes awards for approximately 40 winners, with prizes distributed to those selected from among the applicants at the conclusion of the contest. Participants will memorize or recite specific verses from designated sections, as determined by the judging panel." Another contest is being held for KFH employees, with valuable prizes for 30 winners, as clarified by Al-Saif.

Further to Iftar campaigns and mosque hospitality to sports events, public engagement, and Iftar meals distribution, KFH's Increase Good Deeds in Ramadan program offers a diverse range of community initiatives, showcasing its dedication to social responsibility. The program also encompasses daily competitions, Gergean events, awareness videos and sharing Iftar with many entities that perform their duty during Iftar time, as well as distributing Ramadan Basket, affirming KFH's leadership in social responsibility.

ventures, enabling innovation-led enterprises, and facilitating collaboration between startups, industry, and institutions. From an investor perspective, Mr. Kashif Sayed emphasized the importance of governance, predictability, and execution discipline in investment decision-making, noting that funding follows transparent systems and credible operating frameworks rather than ambition alone.

The session further highlighted areas where startups from Kerala are seeking mentorship, strategic partnerships, and capital support, and the role of cross-border platforms in connecting founders with international investors. Speakers underlined the importance of regulatory clarity, institutional maturity, and long-term policy consistency in attracting sustainable investment.

Through initiatives such as TRANSCEND, PPF Kuwait continues to position itself as a thought-leadership platform for informed dialogue on professional skill development, entrepreneurship, innovation, and cross-border investment, strengthening engagement between the Indian diaspora and institutional stakeholders in Kerala.

‘Brat’ singer takes a delightful detour into new territory

Charli xcx broods on ‘Wuthering Heights’ soundtrack

LOS ANGELES, Feb 15, (AP): Charli xcx’s soundtrack for Emerald Fennell’s adaptation of Emily Brontë’s “Wuthering Heights” is a brooding collection approximating some image of gothic romanticism.

Its enjoyable if not revelatory 12 tracks are a collaboration with songwriters and producers Finn Keane and Justin Raisen, and her first full-length album since the zeitgeist-shaping “Brat.”

It is not the role of every film soundtrack to function as a standalone album, though Charli has said that was her ambition here. In the midst of her “Brat” summer two years ago, she worked on “Wuthering Heights,” delighted to detour into different territory.

But how different is it in ethos? There’s a shared spirit of deep devotion and infatuation, surely, in both “Brat” and Brontë’s “Wuthering Heights,” and a shared sexuality in Charli and Fennell’s art - people wear corsets to nightclubs these days. Instrumentation might be the biggest distinction; here, Charli uses strings arrangements for the first time, often for propulsion, like on the anxious “Seeing Things.”

The rave work might have been put to the side, but Charli’s signatures remain throughout: auto-tuned vocals, unexpected production, shackled and resonant pop hooks.

They are everywhere on “Wuthering Heights,” from the previously released singles like “Wall of Sound” - no Phil Spector here - and the spacey ballad “Chains of Love,” with its echoes of Taylor Swift, to the electro-pop “My Reminder” and an underutilized Sky Ferreira on “Eyes of the World.” The last is their first collaboration since 2019’s “Cross You Out” and samples English rock band Wolf Alice’s “Don’t Delete the Kisses.”

It’s likely that Charli has a great industrial record in her, evidenced by the first song released for the soundtrack and its undisputed best: “House,” featuring the great experimentalist John Cale. (It’s no wonder it works so well: Charli is an undisputed Velvet Underground superfan. The band’s high art, pop fame is a central theme in her vision, as is their ability to combine the “elegant and brutal” - a favorite quote of hers that is actually a quote of his.) Cale recites a poem in his weathered Welsh tone atop cello and metallic sounds, building into its booming final minute. “I think I’m gonna die in this house,” he and Charli harmonize. It builds in distortion from there, the album’s only true moment of gothic seduction, before Cale brings it to a spoken word coda. “In every room,” he says, “I hear silence.”

In whole, “Wuthering Heights” does function as an album as much as it does a soundtrack - but that’s mostly the benefit of having a single artist realize their single vision, a privilege rarely afforded. Charli xcx does not waste it here.

ST. PAUL, Minn.: Former CNN host turned independent journalist Don Lemon pleaded not guilty to federal civil rights charges Friday, following a protest at a Minnesota church where an Immigration and Customs Enforcement official is a pastor. Four others also pleaded not guilty in the case.

Lemon insists he was at the Cities Church in St. Paul to chronicle the Jan. 18 protest but was not a participant. The veteran journalist vowed to fight what he called “baseless charges” and protect his free speech rights.

“For more than 30 years, I’ve been a journalist, and the power and protection of the First Amendment has been the underpinning of my work. The First Amendment, the freedom of the press, are the bedrock of our democracy,” Lemon said outside the courthouse after his arraignment. “And like all of you here in Minnesota, the great people of Minnesota, I will not be intimidated, I will not back down.”

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla.: Bad Bunny really wanted to see Carlos Correa play for Puerto Rico at home in the World Baseball Classic.

Correa, the infielder for the Houston Astros left off the WBC roster over insurance coverage, said Friday that the music superstar and fellow native of Puerto Rico had offered to pay for a policy.

“It means a lot that he’s that involved,” Correa told reporters at the Astros’ spring training complex. “He tried to do everything possible. I wanted to play and make sure that I was going to go out there and play for Team Puerto Rico in Puerto Rico. The fact that he did that means a lot in how much he cares for the country, how much he cares for the fans back home. I’m deeply grateful that he tried that hard.” (AP)

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador: A five-concert “residency” by singer-songwriter and superstar Shakira in El Salvador’s capital builds on President Nayib Bukele’s yearslong effort to remake the Central American country’s international image from one of the world’s most violent countries into one of the safest.

The sold-out shows in the country’s National Stadium Jorge “El Magico” González this week follow international surfing tournaments and the Miss Universe competition two years ago. El Salvador has seen big name performers in recent years, but like Bad Bunny in 2022 and Karol G in 2024, they typically play one concert and move on. (AP)

Chris Hemsworth leads stylish crime thriller

‘Crime 101’ is a middle-of-the-road LA heist movie

LOS ANGELES, Feb 15, (AP): Bart Layton’s “Crime 101” is a “Heat” pastiche that, even if it falls well shy of its Michael Mann blueprint, has some basic appeal going for it. Los Angeles crime movies are fun. Chris Hemsworth looks good in a suit. And we’re all suckers for savvy criminals with good escape routes.

Just as Robert De Niro’s Neil McCauley strategized along L.A.’s asphalt arteries in “Heat,” Mike Davis (Hemsworth) works exclusively up and down the 101 freeway. Near its exit ramps, he hits high-value targets with insider information. He works stealthily and alone, slipping out of surveillance camera sight in time to stash his window-tinted car in a garage.

And like McCauley in “Heat,” there’s a detective on his trail. Detective Lou Lubesnick (Mark Ruffalo) has deduced a pattern in Mike’s heists. Not many in the department, though, have much interest in his theories. His boss is pushing clearance rates, and his partner (Corey Hawkins) is beginning to realize Lou may be detrimental to his career ambitions.

If any of this sounds like familiar territory, there’s more. Mike also has a budding romance with a woman (a vibrant Monica Barbaro) who doesn’t know his profession. Lurking on the outside is a dangerously reckless thief (a typically scuzzy Barry Keoghan) who doesn’t have Davis’ panache. Oh, and Mike tells his sole contact (Nick Nolte) he’ll do just one more job and then he’s gone for good.

So, yes, “Crime 101” can feel a little like an introductory course to the heist movie. But those making out their syllabi would be better sticking with the OG standbys (“The Asphalt Jungle,” “Rififi”) and the more muscular modern classics (“Heat,” “Inside Man,” “Logan Lucky”) than this stylish but hollow iteration.

“Crime 101,” adapted by Layton from Don Winslow’s novella, isn’t trying to recreate the heist-movie wheel. It’s a solid if trope-heavy throwback that leans into genre clichés with an expansive, character-first approach. But even with the aid of a good ensemble cast, “Crime 101” ends up lacking in both depth of character and set-piece spectacle, leaving it stuck in the middle of the road.

In both documentaries (“The Impostor,” “The Deepest Breath”) and fiction films (“American Animals”), Layton has evidenced an abiding fondness for the heist movie. His passion for the genre is self-evident from the start in “Crime 101,” just as is the benefit of cinematographer Erik Wilson, who gives the movie a cool sheen. In the opening credits, as Mike dresses for a job, he brushes off dead skin and the particles float softly in the morning light like falling snow.

But “Crime 101” also has a Big Theme to announce at the start. Over the opening montage a disembodied voice over sounds with the encouragement that all is attainable: “Today is a beautiful day of opportunity.” As “Crime 101” proceeds, all of its central characters are in some way wrestling with their need, or desire, for more.

Some characters illustrate this unsubtle and repetitive point better than others. While Hemsworth’s Mike is smooth and compelling when the action starts, the character is preposterously thinly sketched. A former foster kid raised to steal, he lives hermit-like in Malibu. This, too, mirrors De Niro’s McCauley; presumably attachment-adverse thieves all share the same real-estate agent.

But “Crime 101” has a few more captivating supporting characters. Halle Berry plays Sharon, an insurance broker with a Rolodex of wealthy clients who mixes into the unfolding drama. Her on-theme characteristic is that the chauvinistic leaders of her company keep dangling a partnership that never comes. But Berry imbues Sharon with enough personality and verve to make you wonder why she wasn’t the main character.

Ruffalo also predictably elevates the material. His detective is a rumpled heap of midlife trouble, with a divorce getting underway. Again, this is far from an uncommon type, but Ruffalo’s natural sensitivity warms the character into three dimensionality.

With Mike fixed on a big score, all of these characters are ultimately forced to reckon with their proximity to millions, and make a choice. That things end up ultimately with someone donning a hotel worker uniform - one more time: like McCauley - extends the “Heat” parallels to an almost comical degree. “Crime 101” is the rare film to make you wonder: Can a movie cosplay another movie? The real heist of “Crime 101” is an old one: If you’re going to steal, steal from the best.

“Crime 101,” an Amazon MGM released is rated R by the Motion Picture Association for language throughout, some violence and sexual material/nudity. Running time: 140 minutes. Two stars out of four.

Film paints a vivid portrait of Nigeria in 1993

A deeply affecting day with father in ‘My Father’s Shadow’

LOS ANGELES, Feb 15, (AP): Two young boys spend a day with their oft absent father in Lagos amid political turbulence in “My Father’s Shadow,” an affecting debut feature from Akinola Davies Jr.

The film, which premiered at last year’s Cannes Film Festival, might have missed out on the Oscars (the U.K.’s selection didn’t even make the shortlist), but don’t let that oversight dissuade you from seeking it out now that it’s finally opened in North American theaters recently. “My Father’s Shadow” is a gem, a deeply felt memory piece and vibrant portrait of Nigeria in 1993.

The script was a collaboration between Davies Jr. and his brother, Wale Davies, who were born and raised in Nigeria and lost their father at a young age. They were 8 and 10 at the time of the 1993 election, the same age as the two main characters, but this story is only loosely autobiographical - inspired by that loss and those feelings. In “My Father’s Shadow,” the father, Folarin (a brilliant Sopé Dirisú) is very much alive, but there’s dread in the air. Time seems to slow when they pass by a group of military men who all turn and stare, like Folarin has a target on him. More than a few characters seem downright startled to see him, too, as though he’s already a ghost.

It might sound a little silly or contrived, but it’s done with such subtlety it’s quite moving in execution. After all, Folarin is already kind of a fading memory for his sons, Aki (Godwin Egbo) and Remi (Chibuike Marvelous Egbo), as absent as he is in their lives. At the beginning of the film, the boys catch him stopping by their house in the village to change clothes quickly before departing again. At first, you’re not sure what kind of man and father Folarin is - he seems distant and uninterested in the boys, who insist on coming with him on his journey to the city. A kinder, gentler side will emerge in time, but it’s Folarin’s complexities and contradictions that make him such a fascinating character, who we grow to love and appreciate through the boys’ eyes. The Egbo brothers are extraordinary playing these fictional brothers too - you never feel like you’re watching young actors, just kids authentically processing the world around them.

These three pack quite a bit of life into their day and a half in Lagos, where Folarin’s main objective is to try to get six months of back pay from a supervisor who is never around (and doesn’t seem to pay any of his other employees regularly either). Folarin is told he might come back for the night shift, and that he and his sons should just explore Lagos in the interim. Davies, working with cinematographer Jermaine Edwards (who shot on 16 mm), paints a colorful portrait of the Nigerian metropolis. Folarin gets to impart some life lessons, too, about protecting family and the importance of preserving memories, like that of the brother he lost when he was young.

The political backdrop doesn’t weigh too heavily on these kids. It’s mostly something that the grown-ups around them are always talking about, but children can sense the unease of tentative hope too. When they start their adventure, Moshood Abiola, or MKO, has won the presidential election, and there is optimism in the air for the maybe the first time in their young lives. By the end, the dream has been shattered. The boys have also just made a startling revelation about their father. And everyone seems to lose a little innocence all at once. As violence erupts around them, all that’s left to do is retreat. At least they’re together.

At its heart “My Father’s Shadow” has a simple and profoundly sad message about family and time. Folarin has been absent trying to make money to send to his family; But all the boys want is for him to be around more.

“My Father’s Shadow,” a Mubi released in theaters Friday, is has not been rated by the Motion Picture Association. Running time: 93 minutes. Four stars out of four.

FX-Hulu series criticized for profiting off Kennedy’s legacy

‘Love Story’ revisits JFK Jr. and Carolyn Bessette, sparks backlash

LOS ANGELES, Feb 15, (AP): With just a single photo released from their wedding day, much of the relationship between John F. Kennedy Jr. and Carolyn Bessette remains shrouded in romanticized legend: the courtship between the fashion publicist and the scion of an already much-mythologized family, the private nuptials and, just three years later, their deaths in a tragic plane crash.

The new FX and Hulu series premiered Thursday, “Love Story: John F. Kennedy Jr. & Carolyn Bessette,” attempts to fill in the gaps and chronicle their life together. It details a meet cute at a party and culminates in the deaths of the couple and Bessette’s sister Lauren Bessette on July 16, 1999, when a small plane piloted by Kennedy crashed into the Atlantic Ocean.

Jack Schlossberg, Kennedy’s nephew, spoke out against the series last year, saying it was profiting off his family “in a grotesque way” accusing executive producer Ryan Murphy of “making millions” off Kennedy’s legacy. Murphy retaliated on California Gov. Gavin Newsom’s podcast, saying it was an “odd choice to be mad about your relative that you really don’t remember.” Schlossberg, now running for Congress in New York, took to social media to share memories of his uncle.

Murphy was absent from the recent press circuit for “Love Story,” but executive producer Brad Simpson - a veteran of Murphy’s based-on-a-true-story “American Crime Story” projects - told The Associated Press that the creative team is “fully aware that there are real people and real tragedies often at the heart of these stories.”

“I’m not going to pretend like on some level we’re not making an entertainment product out of it, but we’ve tried to be ethical and we’ve tried to be incredibly sincere,” Simpson said.

Paul Anthony Kelly and Sarah Pidgeon, who portray Kennedy and Bessette in the series, say they took care in playing the couple, but do respect Schlossberg’s opinion.

“I don’t know what it’s like to have a TV show or a movie or a book written about my family, and I understand his sensitivities, and I fully support him speaking his mind,” Pidgeon said.

Added Kelly: “We tried to have as much integrity and love going into this and retelling that I hope that people see that.”

The series is based on the book “Once Upon a Time: The Captivating Life of Carolyn Bessette Kennedy” by Elizabeth Beller. Episodes detail Bessette’s ambition, rising through the ranks of Calvin Klein, to Kennedy’s struggles keeping George magazine afloat.

We see Grace Gummer as Caroline Kennedy and Naomi Watts as Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, nearing the end of her life and disappearing of both the magazine and tells it, Kennedy and Bessette had a magical first date that went nowhere for years because, shortly after, the tabloids reported he was back together with Hannah.

Pidgeon admits she worried the project would be more salacious than sincere, but quickly realized that wasn’t the case.

“I felt a fear that we were going to sensationalize this. And then as I got on board the project that could not be, in my experience, further from the truth.”

The show’s creator, Connor Hines, is adamant that it’s “extensively researched.”

“We obviously had Elizabeth’s book, but I read every single newspaper article that was written about them, every tell-all,” said Hines. “Obviously, all of that material has to be taken with a grain of salt, and you have to be very judicious in terms of how you extract some of this information, because people have their own memories, people have their own slights, but we were exhaustive and diligent in how we approached this and I think that will ring true when people watch it.”

“Love Story” isn’t the first show about the Kennedy family that has faced criticism. In 2011, The History Channel dropped a miniseries starring Greg Kinnear as President John F. Kennedy and Katie Holmes as Jacqueline Kennedy, saying the finished project didn’t fit the network’s brand after Kennedy associates complained about script inaccuracies. “The Kennedys” ended up airing on Reelz Channel.

And it’s not the only show about the Kennedy family coming soon: Netflix has announced its making “Kennedy,” a series focused on the political dynasty’s origins and based on Fredrik Logevall’s “JFK: Coming of Age in the American Century, 1917-1956.” Michael Fassbender will play Joe Kennedy Sr., the family patriarch.

A month of worship, reflection, and festive gatherings

A look at Ramadan and how Muslims worldwide observe the holy month

CAIRO, Feb 15, (AP): Observant Muslims the world over will soon be united in a ritual of daily fasting from dawn to sunset as the Islamic holy month of Ramadan starts. For Muslims, it’s a time for increased worship, religious reflection and charity. Socially, it often brings families and friends together in festive gatherings around meals to break their fast.

Ramadan is followed by the Islamic holiday of Eid al-Fitr.

Ramadan is the ninth month of the Islamic lunar calendar; the month cycles through the seasons.

The start of the month traditionally depends on the sighting of the crescent moon. This year, the first day of Ramadan is expected to be on or around Feb. 18 or 19. The actual start date may vary among countries and Muslim communities due to declarations by multiple Islamic authorities around the globe on whether the crescent had been sighted or different methodologies used to determine the beginning of the month.

This year, the start of Ramadan is expected around the same time as Ash Wednesday, a solemn day of fasting and reflection that signals the start of Lent, the most penitential season of the church calendar for Catholics and many other Christians.

Fasting is one of the Five Pillars of Islam, along with the profession of faith, prayer, alms-giving and pilgrimage.

Muslims see various meanings and lessons in observing the fast.

It’s regarded as an act of worship to attain piety and one of submission to God. The devout see benefits, including practicing self-restraint, cultivating gratitude and empathizing with people who are poor and hungry.

The daily fast in Ramadan includes abstaining from all food and drink - not even a sip of water is allowed - from dawn to sunset, before breaking the fast in a meal known as “iftar” in Arabic.

Muslims typically stream into mosques for congregational prayers and dedicate more time to religious contemplation and the reading of the Quran, the Muslim holy book.

Charity is a hallmark of Ramadan. Among other ways of giving, many seek to provide iftar for those in need, distributing Ramadan boxes filled with pantry staples, handing out warm meals alongside such things as dates and juice or helping hold free communal meals.

Muslims eat a predawn meal, called “suhoor,” to hydrate and nurture their bodies ahead of the daily fast.

There are certain exemptions, such as for those who are unable to because of illness or travel. Those unable to fast due to being temporarily ill or traveling need to make up for the missed days of fasting later.

Muslims are ethnically and racially diverse and not all Ramadan traditions are rooted in religion. Some customs may transcend borders, while others can differ across cultures.

Many social rituals center on gathering and socializing after the daily fast. Some Muslims decorate their homes, put out Ramadan-themed tableware and centerpieces or throng to markets and Ramadan bazaars.

In Egypt, Ramadan is typically a festive time. Colorful lanterns, in different shapes and sizes, dangle from children’s hands and adorn homes. Ramadan songs may be played to welcome the month.

Ramadan’s soundscape in Egypt has traditionally included the predawn banging on drums by a “me-saharati” who roams neighborhoods, calling out to the faithful, sometimes by name, to wake them up for the suhoor meal.

A lineup of new television series is another social fixture of the month in some countries, and advertisers compete for viewers’ attention.

In various regions, some Muslims worry that the month is getting commercialized, and say an emphasis on decorations, TV shows, outings or lavish iftar banquets can detract from Ramadan’s religious essence. Others say that a balance can be struck and that, in moderation, such rituals are part of the month’s festive spirit.

In Indonesia, Ramadan rituals vary across regions, reflecting the diversity of cultures. In deeply conservative Aceh province, animals are slaughtered during Meugang festivities, the meat cooked and shared with family, friends, poor people and orphans.

Hundreds of residents in Tangerang, a city outside the capital, Jakarta, flock to the Cisadane River to wash their hair with rice straw shampoo and welcome the fasting month with a symbolic spiritual cleansing.

Across the island of Sumatra, after evening prayers, many boys and girls parade through the streets, carrying torches and playing Islamic songs.

In the United States, where Muslims make up a racially and ethnically diverse minority, gathering at mosques and Islamic centers when possible for iftar meals and prayers provides many Muslim families with a sense of community. Some Muslims also organize or attend interfaith iftar meals.

‘Painting has become a refuge from fear’

In Gaza, Palestinian girl transforms tent into gallery of war memories

GAZA, Feb 15, (Xinhua): A gallery has taken form within a tent, once a temporary refuge for a displaced family in Gaza. Its walls now bear dozens of stark black-and-white paintings, created with charcoal salvaged from cooking pots and the ink of discarded ballpoint pens.

Though it seems to upend the conventions of both exhibition space and artistic medium, the gallery has become, for locals, a repository of memory, preserving the raw emotions of the latest chapter in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, which erupted on Oct. 7, 2023.

The paintings were created by Marah Al-Zaanin, an 18-year-old Palestinian girl who established and now operates the tent-turned-gallery in Gaza City, in the northern Gaza Strip.

“I did not know how to paint seriously before the war,” she said. “But painting has become my own world, a refuge from fear and from the scenes of death that we have been living with.”

Originally from Beit Hanoun in northern Gaza, Al-Zaanin and her family members were forced to flee to a shelter in the Rimal neighborhood in western Gaza City after Israeli forces prevented locals from returning to their homes, despite the latest Israel-Hamas ceasefire that took effect in October 2025.

“Losing the house and feeling unstable was a huge shock. I tried to turn this harsh reality into a space for artistic expression,” she said.

During the conflict, she began sketching in moments of fear. “Whenever the bombing intensified or I felt overwhelmed, I would draw,” she recalled, adding that painting gave her a sense of control over something she could not change.

Day by day, Al-Zaanin found herself drawing dozens of paintings, channeling her emotions into artistic expression.

Palestinian artist Marah Al-Zaanin (first left) draws a painting at a school-turned shelter in Gaza City, on Feb. 12. (Xinhua)

“Drawing gave me the strength to hold on to life and to see, even if it was far away, the light at the end of the conflict tunnel,” she said, adding that the strength she gained from drawing enabled her to continue studying and complete her high school examinations with high scores.

One of the paintings displayed is titled “The Cry of Souls.” At its center are overlapping human faces, with their features blurred. In one corner, the faint silhouette of a bent figure carrying a small sack appears -- a reference to Al-Zaanin’s father, who was searching for food.

She said she created it during a period of severe food shortages, when her father struggled to secure aid for the family. “I painted it at night,” she recalled. “I was afraid he would not return or might be killed while trying to get food.”

The Palestinian death toll in the Gaza Strip has surpassed 72,000, with over 171,000 others injured since the conflict began, according to health authorities in Gaza.

Most of Al-Zaanin’s works were drawn in black and white, a choice she describes as both symbolic and practical. “Black and white reflect the bitterness of what we’ve lived through, and the scarcity of art supplies left me no choice but to use whatever I had at hand,” she explained.

Al-Zaanin said she had long dreamed of holding an art exhibition, and decided not to wait. “I wanted to create my exhibition inside my tent, a space that encapsulates everything I’ve felt during the war,” she said.

She divided the tent into sections, each reflecting different themes of the conflict: mass displacement, amputee children, hunger, and mothers mourning the dead.

The exhibition has attracted many visitors, some of whom share the experiences Al-Zaanin has depicted. Mohammed Abu Khalil, 42, displaced from the Shuja’iyya neighborhood east of Gaza City, said he stopped by the tent out of curiosity.

Egypt finds 10,000-year-old rock shelter in Sinai

CAIRO, Feb 15, (Xinhua): The Egyptian Ministry of Tourism and Antiquities announced on Thursday the discovery of a prehistoric rock shelter on Jabal Umm Arak in South Sinai province, dating back up to 10,000 years.

In a statement, the ministry described the natural sandstone shelter as one of the most important ancient sites in terms of historic value and exceptional artwork.

Discovered by the Egyptian archaeological mission, the shelter spans over 100 metres. Its ceilings are adorned with vivid red and grey paintings depicting animals, symbolic figures, and scenes of daily life from various periods, some dating back to between 10,000 and 5,500 BC.

Engravings on site show hunters with bows and dogs, camel and horse riders, and early Arabic inscriptions, the statement said.

Minister of Tourism and Antiquities Sherif Fathy said the discovery reflects the unique cultural and human richness of the Sinai Peninsula, providing new evidence that many civilizations flourished in Sinai over millennia.

The diversity of finds positions Umm Arak as a natural open-air museum, documenting humanity’s artistic and symbolic development from prehistory up to early Islamic times, the statement added.

Archaeologists also uncovered animal remains and living units, suggesting the shelter was used for thousands of years as a gathering place for people and livestock. Stone tools and pottery shards from ancient Egyptian, Roman, and medieval periods were also found in the site, added the statement.

Meanwhile, archaeologists have been undertaking restoration work on the upper section of the early 10th century Baksei Chamkrong temple in Cambodia’s renowned Angkor Archaeological Park, the APSARA National Authority (ANA) said in a news release on Friday.

Chhun Ratana, an official at the ANA’s Department of Conservation of Monuments and Preventive Archaeology, said the conservation team is currently reinforcing both the interior and exterior walls of the temple’s upper structure, which has been identified as being at “high risk.”

“The upper section has suffered severe damage due to rainwater infiltration,” she said. “Prolonged exposure to moisture has caused bricks to deteriorate and fall, while cracks and water leakage in both the interior and exterior walls have further weakened the structure.”

Ratana said that to restore the temple’s stability and ensure long-term preservation, the team will carefully remove decayed or unstable bricks and replace them with new ones by following proper technical standards.

“The work also includes reinforcing weakened areas, filling cracks, preventing further water leakage, and installing additional structural supports where necessary,” she said.

In October 2025, the ANA’s leadership approved the restoration project in phases, Ratana said, adding that the first phase focuses on urgent conservation and structural reinforcement of the upper section and surrounding walls, and the subsequent phase will involve more comprehensive restoration and strengthening efforts.

Made of bricks, laterite and sandstone, Baksei Chamkrong temple is an early 10th-century Hindu temple built during the reign of King Rajendravarman II.

It is one of the temples in the UNESCO-listed Angkor Archaeological Park in northwest Siem Reap province, which is home to 91 ancient temples built from the ninth to the 13th centuries.

Kuwait conference focuses on training and critical care advancements

AI, digital tech key to transforming medical practice, says minister

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Minister of Health, Dr. Ahmad Al-Awadhi, emphasized the growing importance of Artificial Intelligence (AI) and digital transformation in contemporary medical practice, particularly in supporting clinical decision-making, enhancing the accuracy of predicting complications, and improving safety in operating rooms and intensive care units, reports Al-Seyassah daily.

In his opening statement at the 12th Anesthesia, Intensive Care, and Pain Management Conference on Friday, Minister Al-Awadhi described the conference as a vital platform for exchanging expertise, promoting scientific research, and exploring development opportunities, especially in emerging fields where national talent is being trained and invested in.

He noted that the conference underscores one of the most critical pillars of the healthcare system, a specialty directly linked to patient safety and the quality of medical care.

“The field of anesthesia and intensive care is a pivotal component of the treatment process and a key partner in the success of various medical and surgical interventions,” the minister said.

Dr. Al-Awadhi underscored the continuous support provided by the political leadership to the health sector, stressing the importance of investing in human capital through education, training, and the development of national capabilities. He noted that these efforts form the cornerstone for advancing healthcare services and achieving sustainability and excellence.

He explained that the fields of anesthesia, intensive care, and pain management intersect with numerous medical specialties and play a vital role in managing critical cases and enhancing clinical performance. This requires keeping pace with scientific advancements, strengthening teamwork, and establishing a culture of quality and safety.

Minister Al-Awadhi praised the dedicated professionals in this specialty, highlighting their essential role in ensuring health security and their position as the first line of defense in safeguarding patient safety.

He also expressed his appreciation to the organizing committee, speakers, participants, and sponsors for their contributions to the conference, expressing hope that the outcomes would generate actionable recommendations to further improve healthcare services.

Four new astronauts arrive at ISS to replace evacuated crew

The International Space Station returned to full strength with Saturday's arrival of four new astronauts to replace colleagues who bailed early because of health concerns.

SpaceX delivered the US, French and Russian astronauts a day after launching them from Cape Canaveral. Last month's medical evacuation was NASA's first in 65 years of human spaceflight. One of four astronauts launched by SpaceX last summer suffered what officials described as a serious health issue, prompting their hasty return. That left only three crew members to keep the place running - one American and two Russians - prompting NASA to pause spacewalks and trim research.

Moving in for eight to nine months are NASA's Jessica Meir and Jack Hathaway, France's Sophie Adenot and Russia's Andrei Fedyaev. Meir, a marine biologist, and Fedyaev, a former military pilot, have lived up there before. During her first station visit in 2019, Meir took part in the first all-female spacewalk.

Adenot, a military helicopter pilot, is only the second French woman to fly in space. Hathaway is a captain in the US Navy.

"Bonjour!" Adenot called out once the capsule docked to the space station 277 miles (446 kilometers) up.

A couple of hours later, the hatches swung open and the seven space travelers hugged and exchanged exuberant high-fives. "Let's get rolling," Meir said. (AP)

China shows AI computing power in outer space with new satellite network

HANGZHOU, Feb 15, (Xinhua): China has taken a major step toward building an AI-powered space infrastructure, with a satellite constellation deploying 10 AI models in orbit and establishing inter-satellite networking.

The deployment demonstrates AI applications in deep space exploration, smart city development and natural resource surveys, according to Zhejiang Lab, which developed the constellation with global partners.

China placed 12 satellites, the first group of the space computing constellation called "Three-Body Computing Constellation," into orbit in May 2025.

After nearly nine months of in-orbit testing, the constellation has demonstrated core capabilities including networking, computing, model deployment and scientific payload verification.

genkerosene engines in parallel, generating nearly 1,000 tonnes of thrust. It currently has the largest single-module thrust among China's rockets, Yang said.

In the future, the Long March-10 rocket will integrate two identical boosters in parallel with its seven-engine core stage, giving it a significantly larger carrying capacity, according to Yang.

To ensure the safety of the abort operation during the tests, the rocket and spacecraft systems were jointly designed, with careful optimization of the separation and escape timeline, and meticulous planning of the relative positions, speeds and angular relationship between the rocket and the spaceship, Yang said.

After the spaceship separated, the rocket continued its flight until the first stage reached the predetermined height and speed, at which point its engines were shut down.

During the unpowered upward glide phase, the rocket continuously adjusted its attitude, shifting from nose-forward to tail-forward, to meet the subsequent ignition requirements.

At an altitude of about 110 km, the rocket deployed its four grid fins, just like a bird spreading its wings, getting ready for the return and recovery.

Then came the powered deceleration phase. Two engines were ignited for the second time to decelerate while correcting the rocket's flight position and attitude.

When the engines shut down and the rocket entered the aerodynamic deceleration phase, it further slowed down by relying on its own drag and the aerodynamic forces generated by the grid fins, while deflecting the fins to adjust its position and attitude.

During the final landing phase, three engines ignited successively, and the rocket maneuvered toward the predicted landing site. At about 120 meters above sea level, the onboard tether mechanism was deployed to simulate the capture by a ground-based recovery net system. When reaching about 5 meters in altitude, the rocket achieved a quasi-hovering state before executing a controlled splashdown in the sea.

manned lunar exploration missions, according to the China Aerospace Science and Technology Corporation (CASC).

On Wednesday, China successfully conducted a low-altitude demonstration and verification flight test of the Long March-10 carrier rocket, along with a maximum dynamic pressure abort flight test of its new-generation crewed spaceship Mengzhou, with both the rocket and spaceship still in their prototype phases.

During the tests, the rocket prototype undertook three tasks -- verifying the maximum dynamic pressure abort conditions during the Mengzhou spaceship's ascent, demonstrating the reliability of its multi-stage parallel operations, and testing critical return-phase technologies, according to Yang Shutao, an expert from the CASC.

The Long March-10 rocket series includes two configurations: the Long March-10 with three stages and bundled boosters, and the Long March-10A with two stages and no boosters.

Approximately 55 meters in length, the prototype rocket tested on Wednesday is powered by seven liquid oxy-

Male lungs more reactive than female

Male and female lungs work differently: study

SYDNEY, Feb 15, (Xinhua): Male and female lungs are "wired differently" at the molecular level, a new study confirms, providing further evidence supporting sex-inclusive respiratory disease research and treatment.

The study, led by Australia's University of Technology Sydney (UTS) and the Woolcock Institute of Medical Research, is the first to show that sex modulates gene networks controlling bronchial responsiveness under normal physiological conditions, said a UTS statement on Thursday.

"Biological sex fundamentally shapes how the lungs function, even under healthy, non-diseased conditions," said study lead author, UTS and Woolcock Institute Research Fellow Razia Zakarya.

"Male lungs are intrinsically more reactive to inhaled triggers than female lungs, which helps explain why the sexes experience respiratory disease differently," Zakarya said, adding these differences arise from discrete gene network activity rather than a single gene or hormone.

The study, published in the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology journal, shows that sex differences in lung function exist at a deep molecular level, long before disease develops.

"Essentially, the sexes utilize different genetic toolboxes when exposed to environmental factors," Zakarya said.

The team also found that early-life environmental exposures could alter these molecular networks in sex-specific ways, potentially influencing vulnerability to diseases such as asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease.

Zakarya said the findings underscore the need for sex-inclusive biomedical and environmental health research from the earliest stages of discovery.

Chinese team performs Samoa's first lung biopsy

Scientists develop laser system to control immune cells inside tumors

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 15, (Xinhua): Russian scientists have developed a new photothermal cancer immunotherapy that enables precise control of immune responses inside cancer tumors, ITMO University announced Friday.

The method is based on light-sensitive microcarriers that, when subjected to a laser, release an immunomodulating drug "at the right time and in the right amount," the university said in a news release.

"In this study, we demonstrate that we can remotely control treatment release and the moment of its activation," said Lidia Mikhailova, a junior researcher at ITMO's Faculty of Physics.

"After injection, the drug will remain inactive until we point a laser at the necessary location. This is the main advantage of using a laser in this method: thanks to such precise control, we can minimize side effects and prevent undesirable impact on healthy tissue," she said.

Researchers noted that tumor development and survival depend not only on genetic changes in cancer cells, but also on their interaction with surrounding tissues. Many tumors can "reprogram" immune cells known as macrophages, prompting them to protect the tumor instead of attacking it.

Meanwhile, Tanzanian Prime Minister Mwigulu Nchemba on Thursday called for stronger regional and continental cooperation to combat cancer.

Speaking at the 30th anniversary of the Ocean Road Cancer Institute (ORCI) in Dar es Salaam, Nchemba said progress in cancer control requires joint efforts in research, specialist training, and the sharing of technology and expertise.

The prime minister stressed that collaboration is essential to address Africa's growing cancer burden, adding that Tanzania is ready to serve as a regional hub for the fight against the disease through the ORCI.

Nchemba directed the Ministry of Health to develop a strategy to reduce new cases and mitigate the economic and national well-being impacts.

The government has expanded early screening services for various cancers to primary healthcare facilities, Nchemba said.

According to Ministry of Health statistics, around 44,900 people were newly diagnosed with cancer in Tanzania in 2022, while approximately 29,700 died from the disease that year.

In another development, a Chinese medical team has successfully performed Samoa's first bronchoscopic alveolar lavage and biopsy at the Tupua Tamases Meaole (TTM) Hospital, marking a breakthrough in the diagnosis of respiratory diseases in the Pacific island nation.

The patient, a 76-year-old man, had been repeatedly hospitalized due to right lung atelectasis complicated by infection.

Following multiple consultations between Samoan and Chinese specialists, doctors decided to conduct a bronchoscopy to determine the underlying cause.

After a comprehensive preoperative assessment, Liu Han, a physician specializing in respiratory and critical care medicine from the Chinese team, performed the bronchoscopy along with bronchoalveolar lavage and biopsy.

The patient remained in stable condition after the procedure.

Cong Xiaoqiang, head of the team, noted that invasive bronchoscopic procedures had never previously been carried out in Samoa.

Due to a lack of specialized equipment at the local hospital, the First Hospital of Jilin University in northeast China's Jilin Province dispatched a shipment of dedicated surgical supplies from China to ensure the operation could proceed smoothly.

During the procedure, the team also provided hands-on training and multidisciplinary collaboration with local medical staff, offering standardized technical guidance and laying the groundwork for the gradual establishment of a respiratory disease diagnosis and treatment system in Samoa.

The 10th Chinese medical team to Samoa consists of 10 specialists from the First Hospital of Jilin University, covering disciplines including cardiology, ophthalmology, gynecology, otolaryngology, intensive care medicine, and traditional Chinese medicine.

Serious hobbies improve mental and social health

Yoga, climbing, or D&D: serious leisure boosts your well-being

The Conversation is an independent and nonprofit source of news, analysis and commentary from academic experts.

By Emily Messina
Florida International University

What do collecting old editions of Dungeons & Dragons monster manuals, securing the same tailgate spot for over 20 years and mastering yoga postures have in common? They are all forms of "serious leisure."

These pursuits are different from casual hobbies in several ways. They require participation over longer periods, which makes people who practice them more skilled and more connected with the activity over time. The driving force for casual leisure is having fun; when a participant becomes more focused on accomplishment and improving their skills, the pursuit can gradually become more serious.

I direct the Rehabilitation and Recreational Therapy Program at Florida International University. In my research, I study leisure pursuits and various contexts for serious leisure, with a focus on the tabletop role-playing game Dungeons & Dragons.

I also work in recreational therapy, which helps people recover and return to their pursuits after injury or illness. The approach we use can work as well for someone starting out with a new hobby.

Benefit

The idea of serious leisure was coined in 1982 by sociologist Robert Stebbins, who described the unique characteristics of more structured leisure pursuits. The more we understand about why people do the things they do, the more they can benefit from their pursuits. Even fringe or supposedly nerdy activities like D&D offer insight into the connections people form when they delve into a nonwork activity.

People often associate leisure with ease and freedom. In contrast, serious leisure involves pursuing something for a long time and gradually developing the skills and knowledge required to excel at it. People have to push through barriers or setbacks to stay engaged and make progress.

Over time, participants come to identify with the activity and to feel included in a subculture that has its own norms and values. In my work, that sometimes means developing elaborate characters who can battle beasts, dragons and giants.

Dungeons & Dragons, which was developed in 1974, is a long-form game that takes place in multiple sessions that can last weeks, months or years. A Dungeon Master moderates the game and assumes the role of all monsters and non-player characters.

The Dungeon Master narrates an adventure, aided by a Dungeon Master's Guide and Monster Manual. Players create characters that possess certain traits and qualities. The outcomes of battles, decisions and interactions are determined by dice rolls.

My study included convening focus groups with regular D&D players to determine whether their experiences playing the game represented serious leisure, as opposed to casual leisure associated with traditional board games.

Players described developing their characters for years and acquiring knowledge and skills. They learned how magical items and weapons worked, made calculations and researched their character sheets. All of these practices are attributes of a uniquely D&D subculture.

Participants also described the benefits they received from playing the game. For many of them, D&D offered a sense of community. It also was a safe space and a welcoming activity for those who might feel excluded by traditional leisure pursuits, such as sports and competitive games.

Studies

Prior studies have identified many other activities that can qualify as serious leisure, depending on the level of engagement. Some are in-person physical activities like yoga, sport clubs and rock climbing. Others include online pursuits like multiplayer online games and a virtual Harry Potter running club where members share running stories and experiences keyed to Harry Potter-themed discussion topics, such as logging miles in virtual races for their specific Hogwarts houses. Studies have explored game-based pursuits like tournament bridge, and even the social art of tailgating among serious football fans.

In each case, researchers found that participants experienced hallmarks of serious leisure. For example, participants in multiplayer online games describe prolonged immersion in the activity. Yoga students pursued systematic training and skill development. And maniacally devoted Florida

Gators fans scheduled family events around football season.

In all cases, participants became increasingly involved over time, acquired knowledge and skills, and often forged shared identities and social connections.

How do you know if your favorite leisure pursuit has gotten serious? One indication could be spending a lot of time on it and expanding your related knowledge or skills. You may also personally identify with the activity and its associated norms or subculture. Perhaps you're increasingly spending time with other participants, and even using shared lingo.

Ideally, your serious leisure pursuit will give you pride and a sense of accomplishment. Belonging to a shared subculture can make it easier to express yourself, which promotes social interaction and a feeling of belonging.

These benefits aren't trivial. Studies show that Americans' social networks are getting smaller and that people are spending more time alone. These trends are associated with increased risks for premature death, heart disease and stroke, anxiety and depression, and dementia. In 2023, US Surgeon General Vivek Murthy issued an advisory on the loneliness epidemic that called for a national strategy to advance social connection.

Leisure pursuits are a way to develop shared interests and social contacts. For example, dedicated bridge players describe a social world unique to champion-level players that involves hierarchies and relationships spanning decades.

Serious participants in multiplayer online games describe feeling like part of a team and working together to share materials, skills and knowledge to help win challenges and battles. And serious football fans describe rites of passage associated with fandom, such as a solo performance of the team fight song on the tailgate of a truck. (AP)

SANTA CLARA, Calif., Feb 15, (AP): Graham Ike had 21 points and a season-high 15 rebounds as No. 12 Gonzaga held off Santa Clara 94-86.

Ike shot 7 of 12 and had four assists to help the Bulldogs move a half-game ahead of the Broncos for first place in the West Coast Conference. It’s Ike’s seventh consecutive game with 20 points, matching a similar streak he had in 2024.

Gonzaga (25-2, 13-1) has won 25 games or more in 19 consecutive seasons under coach Mark Few. Few was recently named a finalist for the Naismith Memorial Hall of Fame. Adam Miller scored 20 points, Tyon Grant-Foster added 20, and Emmanuel Innocenti had 16 points and six rebounds for the Bulldogs.

As good as Ike’s was, the Bulldogs had to do without their star forward for three minutes late in the second half while he was in foul trouble.

Christian Hammond scored 16 points for Santa Clara (22-6, 13-2).

The Broncos forced the Bulldogs into several hurried possessions that had the sold-out crowd at Leavey Center roaring early.

Gonzaga missed seven of its first 10 shots and trailed by eight before going on a 15-7 run midway through the first half. Ike later powered his way past two defenders in the key to score and give the Bulldogs their first lead at 31-29.

Lens goes top, Marseille drops more points

PARIS, Feb 15, (AP): Marseille was widely expected to be Paris Saint-Germain’s main challenger in Ligue 1 this season, but Lens is the team to be reckoned with.

Coach Pierre Sage’s unassuming side moved one point ahead of PSG at the top after a crushing 5-0 win at struggling Paris FC, which was promoted last season but is in 16th spot despite big investment.

While Lens celebrated another clinical performance, Marseille’s chaotic week continued with an equalizer conceded deep into stoppage time in 2-2 home draw with Strasbourg.

Marseille is 12 points behind Lens with 12 games left.

Unheralded Lens has won just one league title compared to nine for Marseille and a record 13 for PSG, and has no big-name stars.

Instead, Lens boasts efficient teamwork, self-sacrifice, slick counter-attacking and clinical finishing.

Wesley Saïd is not a household name, other than perhaps in the former coal-mining community of Lens, but the journeyman forward is peaking at the right time. He scored twice to reach 10 league goals for the first time in a season.

He opened the scoring from a cross in the 24th minute and then found the top-left corner with a firm shot from another cross in the 38th.

Saïd hit the post and Lens had two goals disallowed for offside in the first half. The domination continued after the break with France winger Florian Thauvin scoring a penalty before substitute forward Rayan Fofana netted twice late on.

Marseille led 2-0 after Amine Gouiri created one goal and scored the other. But Marseille’s feeble defense fell apart and striker Joaquin Panichelli’s rescued a point with a 97th-minute penalty.

“Once again we conceded a late goal (and) we wasted everything at the end,” Gouiri said. “When things happen a dozen times, it’s not the (tactical) choices of the coach, it’s us on the field.”

Fourth-placed Marseille is two points behind Lyon in third, having played one game more.

Fifth-placed Lille missed the chance to close the gap on Marseille after drawing 1-1 with Brest. Lille still has not won a league game in 2026. Marseille’s players were reeling from Roberto De Zerbi’s departure on Wednesday, just days after a humiliating 5-0 loss at PSG.

The atmosphere was tense at Stade Vélodrome.

Both stands behind the goal were empty except for angry banners, with one urging American owner Frank McCourt and president Pablo Longoria in blunt terms to leave, along with the words “all of your projects go up in smoke! After all these wasted years.”

Nine-time French champion Marseille has not won a trophy since the now-defunct League Cup in 2012.

The fans who did turn up on Saturday booed the players onto the field.

Al-Nahda edges Oman Club for Sultan Cup

Al-Nahda Club celebrates with the Sultan Qaboos Cup.

MUSCAT, Feb 15: Al-Nahda Club secured the 2025-2026 Sultan Qaboos Cup title, defeating Oman Club 2-0 in a thrilling final.

This triumph marks Al-Nahda's second victory in the competition after six previous attempts, where they had reached the final and finished as runners-up. The final was held at the Sultan Qaboos Sports Complex in Muscat, attended by the Sultan's representative, Minister of State and Governor of Muscat, Belarab bin Haitham.

Oman Club dominated the early stages of the match, controlling possession in the first half. However, the game turned in the 35th minute when referee issued a red card to Oman player Mohammed

Al-Maashari for a harsh tackle on Intres Ji, reducing Oman to ten men.

Al-Nahda quickly capitalized on the numerical advantage, controlling the closing minutes of the first half. In stoppage time, full-back Ahmed Al-Kaabi delivered a cross that deflected off Oman defender Basel Al-Rawahi and into the net, giving Al-Nahda the lead.

In the second half, Al-Nahda maintained high pressure and secured the win with a second goal.

Substitute Mohammed Al-Ghafri converted a cross from a teammate late in the match, sealing the 2-0 victory and the coveted cup for Al-Nahda.

Kuwait Club to host 28th Asian Men's Handball Club Championship in April

By Khaled Al-Enezi

Al-Seyassah/Arab Times Staff

KUWAIT CITY, Feb 15: Kuwait Club has been officially awarded the hosting rights for the 28th Asian Men's Club League Championship for the 2024-2025 season, which also serves as the 2026 World Club Championship Qualifiers in Egypt. The tournament is scheduled to run from April 6 to 16, 2026.

Teams are set to arrive in Kuwait on April 4 and 5, with the technical meeting scheduled for April 5 and the tournament kickoff on April 6. The final is slated for April 16.

The championship was initially planned for November 2025 but was postponed due to the Asian Youth Games in Bahrain and the Islamic Solidarity Games in Saudi Arabia. Kuwait also hosted the Asian Men's National Teams Championship (2027 World Cup Qualifiers) in January. Meanwhile, the Gulf Handball Cup Winners' Championship will be held in Manama from March 25 to April 1.

Samah Al-Hajri, Director of Handball at Kuwait Club, expressed pride in the club's selection, citing its successful history in organizing international tournaments and the presence of experienced national staff capable of delivering a world-class event.

Al-Hajri emphasized, "Kuwait Club competes in every local and international competition with one goal: victory. This will apply both in the Gulf Club Championship in Manama and the Asian tournament here in Kuwait." He added that while the packed schedule puts a heavy strain on players, he has full confidence in the "White" stars.

For the Gulf Club Championship, Kuwait Club will rely on three professional players: Francis Marzo, Vladan Lipova, and Victor Ituriza, while the team is searching for a fourth professional to join the Asian tournament roster.

Elsewhere in the Premier League, Al-Arabi defeated Al-Qadsia 26-20 in the 10th round at Sheikh Saad Al-Abdullah Sports Complex, while Al-Salmiya beat Al-Nasr 28-21. With these results, Al-Qadsia moved to 12 points in fourth place, overtaking Al-Nasr, which remains in fifth with 10 points. Al-Salmiya sits sixth with 8 points, and Al-Nasr remains eighth with 2 points.

Norway's Klaebo wins 9th gold to set Winter Olympics record

MUMBAI, Feb 15, (AP): West Indies notched its third T20 Cricket World Cup successive win in Group C when it thumped Nepal by nine wickets and qualified for the Super 8 stage of the tournament.

West Indies had already beat Scotland and England to take command of Group C.

Nepal showed plenty of promise in its first game when it lost narrowly to England, but then two heavy defeats against first-timer Italy and Sunday against West Indies saw it eliminated.

Fast bowler Jason Holder grabbed 4-27 and restricted Nepal to 133-8 after captain Shai Hope won the toss and elected to field. Hope then smashed an unbeaten 61 off 44 balls and Shimron Hetmyer scored 46 off 32 balls as West Indies cruised to 134-1 in 15.2 overs.

Nepal had stuttered to 6-73 in 15 overs but Dipendra Singh Airee (58) and Sompal Kami (26 not out) contributed a 54-run stand in the death overs to give the total some respectability.

Sanjay Krishnamurthi kept America's slender hopes of Super 8 qualification alive with a maiden T20 half-century - 68 not out off 33 balls - against Namibia in their Group A clash.

Skipper Monank Patel also scored 52 off 30 balls as the U.S. notched up its tournament highest score - 199-4 in 20 overs.

Patel was second out just past half-way, and then the U.S. was down to 103-3. Krishnamurthi then put up 87 off 46 balls with Milind Kumar (28), en route to his first T20 World Cup half-century off 23 balls. He hit six sixes.

In reply, Namibia was restricted to 168-6, losing its third game and is now eliminated from the competition. Opener Lauren Steenkamp scored 58 off 39 balls, but the target proved too far off.

Medium-pacer Shadley Van Schalkwyk picked up 2-30 to take his tally to 13 wickets - highest in the tournament. The U.S. won its final game by 31 runs, and now awaits the result in Colombo, depending on other results for any hope of progression.

Tom Banton hit an unbeaten 63 off 41 balls and Jofra Archer returned to form in England's five-wicket win over Scotland.

England, desperately needing the victory following an unconvincing four-run win over Nepal and a loss to the West Indies, made 155-5 in 18.2 overs after the Scots were bowled out for just 152 in Kolkata.

Scotland wasted an ideal platform after getting to 90-3 in 10 overs, with the batters falling to mistimed sweep shots against the spinners.

England's top-order batters Phil Salt, Jos Buttler and captain Harry Brook fell for single digits, but Banton put on 66 with Jacob Bethell (32) and 46 with Sam Curran (28) to lift the team to second in Group C behind West Indies. It next plays Italy on Monday.

Salt drove loosely at Brandon McMullen and was caught at point before the pace bowler then took a smart catch over his shoulder at mid-off to dismiss Buttler as England slipped to 13-2.

Banton and Bethell then dug in well before Scotland hit back with two wickets in eight balls. Bethell slog swept and was caught at fine leg while Brook top-edged a scoop to fine leg.

Earlier, England hit back in the closing overs after Scotland had looked poised to set a challenging target when 113-3 midway through the 13th over.

The dismissal of captain Richie Berrington, who made 49, and Tom Bruce (24) in the space of four balls left Scotland struggling to accelerate late on.

Vinícius scores 2, Mbappé-less Madrid beats Sociedad

MADRID, Feb 15, (AP): Vinícius Júnior scored two penalties and a Real Madrid team without superstar Kylian Mbappé moved top of La Liga with a 4-1 win over Real Sociedad.

Mbappé watched from the substitutes' bench after missing some team training sessions during the week with discomfort in his left knee. Madrid coach Álvaro Arbeloa said he was able to play, but evidently he did not want to rush his star goal-getter.

Nor did he need to.

Mbappé and Jude Bellingham, out with a hamstring injury, watched as Madrid produced an assured team performance to end the visitors' 10-game unbeaten run across all competitions.

Perhaps Tuesday's team-dinner at a fancy restaurant paid for by Mbappé and Vinícius helped focus the players before facing Benfica in the Champions League playoffs next week.

Gonzalo García opened the scoring with a slight touch to Trent Alexander-Arnold's cross in the fifth minute. However, it was to be a largely frustrating game for the young attacker, who failed to make more of other good opportunities.

Dean Huijsen conceded a penalty for bringing down Yangel Herrera, and Mikel Oyarzabal duly equalized from the spot with a hard high centrally placed shot in the 21st.

Referee Francisco José Hernández Maeso awarded another penalty at the other end four minutes later when Jon Aramburu caught Vinícius' ankle, bringing him down. The Brazilian dusted himself off to score from the spot in the 25th.

Madrid captain Fede Valverde gratefully scored the third in the 31st after being left too much space at the edge of the penalty box. It was Valverde's first goal of the season.

Gonzalo should have scored again before the break when Valverde set him up for what looked like a simple tap in, but Vinícius made it 4-1 with his second spot kick after the break, awarded after Aramburu was again penalized for bringing him down.

Dani Carvajal made his long-awaited return around the hour mark when he replaced Alexander-Arnold for his first league appearance since Madrid's 2-1 loss to Barcelona in October. Carvajal was reportedly unhappy that the 21-year-old Castilla player David Jiménez played at right back in Valencia last weekend.

Borja Iglesias scored in stoppage time, after having another seemingly good goal ruled out through VAR, to salvage a 2-2 draw for Celta Vigo at Espanyol.

A rueful Iglesias shook his head and smiled after having a 77th-minute goal disallowed when a long check determined there had been an offside infringement.

India dominates Pakistan to reach T20 World Cup Super 8

Unbeaten West Indies book spot

India's Ishan Kishan plays a shot during the T20 World Cup cricket match between India and Pakistan in Colombo, Sri Lanka. (AP)

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka, Feb 15, (Agencies): India delivered a commanding performance to defeat Pakistan by 61 runs, extending its dominance in T20 World Cup history and becoming the first team to secure a spot in the Super 8 stage.

Chasing a target of 176, Pakistan never found momentum and were bowled out for 114 in 18 overs. India's bowling unit shared the spoils, with Hardik Pandya, Jasprit Bumrah, Axar Patel and Varun Chakaravarty claiming two wickets each to dismantle the batting lineup.

Pakistan's troubles began early as they lost four wickets inside the Power-play with barely any runs on the board. Salman Ali Agha struck a boundary but fell the very next delivery, leaving the side in deep trouble at 13/3.

Axar Patel further dented Pakistan's hopes by dismissing the dangerous Usman Khan, who was closing in on a half-century before being stumped just six runs short. Mohammad Nawaz briefly counterattacked with a boundary but soon holed out in the deep as wickets continued to tumble.

Shadab Khan attempted to revive the innings with a fighting effort, and a few boundaries followed, but the required run rate hovered near double digits, keeping the pressure firmly on Pakistan.

By the end, India were cruising toward another comprehensive win over their arch-rivals, strengthening their head-to-head edge and underlining their status as one of the tournament favorites.

Pakistan captain Salman Ali Agha has won the toss and elected to field in the most-anticipated game of the Twenty20 World Cup on Sunday as the two captains refrained from shaking hands because of military and diplomatic tensions between the two neighbors.

Political tensions between the two nations have often boiled over on to the cricket field. Sunday's game is the first time the teams have met since last year's acrimonious Asia Cup tournament in the United Arab Emirates that was won by India and where players refused to shake hands.

Since the Asia Cup where Suryakumar Yadav refused to shake hands with his Pakistani counterpart Agha, the practice has been followed in the subsequent women's and Under 19 world cups.

There was speculation earlier that the International Cricket Council may have resolved the conflict when it per-sueded Pakistan to play the India game after it had threatened a boycott earlier this month.

At Mumbai, West Indies notched its third successive win in Group C when it thumped Nepal by nine wickets and qualified for the Super 8 stage of the tournament.

West Indies had already beat Scotland and England to take command of Group C.

Nepal showed plenty of promise in its first game when it lost narrowly to England, but then two heavy defeats against first-timer Italy and Sunday against West Indies saw it eliminated.
